Vol'sun-ga Sa'ga (vŏl'sŏŏn-gă sä'gă). [Icel. Völsunga saga.] An Icelandic saga, probably of Norwegian origin, which preserves in a variant form the legend embodied in the Nibelungenlied. See BRYNHILD: SIGURD.

volt (vōlt), n. [F. volte, fr. It. volta a turn. See VAULT a spring.] 1. Man. a A tread or gait in which a horse going sideways makes a turn round a center. b A circle traced by a horse in this movement. c The ground marked for the first turn, or volt.

2. Fencing. A leaping movement to avoid a thrust.

volt, n. [After Alessandro Volta, the Italian electrician.] Elec. The unit of electromotive force; — defined by the International Electrical Congress in 1893 and by United States statute as: that electromotive force which steadily applied to a conductor whose resistance is one ohm will produce a current of one ampere. It is practically equiv. to 10^8 C. G. S. electromagnetic units. Cf. STANDARD CELL.

☞ By the above definition, the volt is dependent upon the ohm and the ampere, as confirmed, after much discussion, by the International Conference on Electrical Units and Standards, 1908.

‖ vol'ta (vŏl'tä), n.; pl. -TE (-tā). [It. volta turn, turning, time. See VOLT tread.] 1. An old dance, the lavolta.

2. Music. A turning; a time; — chiefly used in phrases signifying that the part is to be repeated; as, una volta, once. Seconda volta, second time, points to certain modifications in the close of a repeated strain.

3. Man. = 1st VOLT, 1.

Vol'ta ef-fect' (vŏl'tä). Elec. Difference of potential observable between two metals joined on an open circuit.

volt'age (vōl'tăj), n. Elec. Electric potential or potential difference expressed in volts; as, the voltage of a current.

vol-ta'ic (vŏl-tā'ĭk), a. [Cf. F. voltaïque, It. voltaico.] 1. Of or pert. to, or discovered by, Alessandro Volta, who first devised apparatus for chemically developing electric currents, and established this branch of electric science.

2. Of or pertaining to voltaism, or voltaic electricity; galvanic; as, voltaic induction; the voltaic arc.

voltaic arc. = ARC, n., 5. — v. battery. = BATTERY, 8 a. — v. cell. = CELL, 4. — v. circuit or circle. = CIRCUIT, n., 8 a. — v. couple. = COUPLE, n. 6. — v. electricity. See ELECTRICITY, 1 b. — v. pile. See 2d PILE, 5 a. — v. protection of metals, the protection of a metal from corrosion by associating it with a metal which is positive to it, as when iron is galvanized.

Vol-tair'i-an (vŏl-târ'ĭ-ăn) } a. [Cf. F. voltairien.] Of, vol'ta-ism (vŏl'tä-ĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. voltaïsme. See 2d VOLT.] Voltaic or current electricity; also, the branch of electrical science dealing with this. See ELECTRICITY, 1; cf. GALVANISM, 1.
Vol-tair'e-an (-ē-ăn) } pert. to, like, or characteristic of, Voltaire. — n. An advocate of Voltaire's theories or practices. — Vol-tair'i-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n.

vol-tam'e-ter (vŏl-tăm'ē-tĕr), n. [voltaic + meter.] Physics. An instrument for measuring the quantity of electricity passed through a conductor by the amount of electrolysis produced, as by measuring the gases generated from acidulated water, or by weighing the copper deposited from a solution of copper sulphate. — vol'ta-met'ric (vŏl'tä-mĕt'rĭk), a.

Gas Voltameter. a a Glass Tubes to collect the gases produced by electrolysis; b b Binding Screws; c c Electrodes; d d Conducting Wires.

volt-am'me-ter (vōlt-ăm'mē-tĕr), n. [2d volt + ammeter.] Physics. A wattmeter.

volt ampere. [2d volt + ampere.] Elec. A unit of electric measurement equal to the product of a volt and an ampere. For direct current it is a measure of power in the same as a watt; for alternating current it is a measure of apparent power.

Vol'ta's law (vōl'täz). Elec. The law that when a number of metals are in contact in series, the total electromotive force of the extremes of the series is equal to the algebraic sum of the electromotive forces at the several junctions.

‖ vol'ti (vōl'tē), imperative. [It., prop. pres. subj., fr. voltare to turn. See VOLT a tread.] Music. Turn, that is, turn over the leaf; as, vol'ti su'bi-to (sōō'bē-tō) (abbr. v. s.), turn over quickly.

‖ vol'tĭ'geur' (vŏl'tē'zhûr'), n. [F., fr. voltiger to vault, It. volteggiare.] 1. A tumbler; a leaper or vaulter.

2. Mil. A member of any of various French organizations of light infantry, often sharpshooters. Obs. or Hist.

volt'me'ter (vōlt'mē'tĕr), n. [2d volt + -meter.] Elec. Any instrument for measuring in volts the differences of potential between different points of an electrical circuit. Voltmeters are always connected in parallel with the circuit the voltage of which is to be measured. The common type is a galvanometer having a high-resistance coil. voltz'ite (vōlts'īt), n. Also voltz'ine (-ĭn). [After Voltz, a French engineer.] Min. An oxysulphide of zinc, Zn_7S_8O, occurring in implanted spherical globules of a yellowish or reddish color. H., 4-4.5. Sp. gr., 3.66-3.80.

vol'u-bil'i-ty (vŏl'ū-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. [L. volubilitas: cf. F. volubilité.] Quality or state of being voluble.

vol'u-ble (vŏl'ū-b'l), a. [L. volubilis, fr. volvere, volutum, to roll, to turn round; akin to Gr. ἑλίσσειν to infold, to inwrap, ἑλύειν to roll, G. welle a wave: cf. F. voluble. Cf. WELL of water, CONVOLVULUS, DEVOLVE, INVOLVE, REVOLT, VAULT an arch, VOLUME, VOLUTE.] 1. Easily rolling or turning; easily set in motion; apt to roll; rotating; revolving; as, voluble particles of matter.

2. Moving with ease and smoothness in utterance; of ready or rapid speech; glib; as, a voluble tongue; — formerly used without any derogatory suggestion.

A grave and voluble eloquence. Bp. Hacket.

3. Changeable; unstable; fickle. Obs.

4. Bot. Having the power or habit of twining.

Syn. — See TALKATIVE.

— vol'u-ble-ness, n. — vol'u-bly, adv.

vol'u-crine (vŏl'ū-krĭn; -krīn), a. [L. volucris a bird.] Pertaining to birds.

vol'ume (vŏl'ūm), n. [F., fr. L. volumen a roll of writing, a book, volume, fr. volvere, volutum, to roll. See VOLUBLE.] 1. A roll; a scroll; a written document rolled up for keeping or use, in the manner of the ancients. Obs.

The papyrus, and afterward the parchment, was joined together [by the ancients] to form one sheet, and then rolled upon a staff into a volume (volumen). Encyc. Brit.

2. Hence, a collection of printed sheets bound together, whether a single work, a part of a work, or more than one work; a book; tome; esp., that part of an extended work bound up together in one cover. "An odd volume of a set of books." Franklin.

Volume, a book distinguished from other books or other volumes of the same work by having its own title, paging and register. This is the bibliographic use of the word, sanctioned by the British Museum rules. That is, it is in this sense only that it applies to all the copies of an edition as it comes from the printer But there is also a bibliographic use, to denote a number of pages bound together, which pages may be several volumes in the other sense, or a part of a volume or parts of several volumes. C. A. Cutter

3. Anything of a rounded or swelling form suggesting a roll, or scroll; a turn; convolution; coil. Now Rare.

Undulating billows rolling their silver volumes Irving.

4. Space occupied, as measured by cubic units, i. e., cubic inches, feet, etc.; compass; hence, loosely, a mass; bulk; as, the volume of an elephant's body; a volume of gas.

5. Music. Fullness or quantity of tone.

Syn. — See BULK.

vol'ume, v. t. To roll or rise in volume or volumes.

vol'ume, v. t. To collect or gather in or as in a volume.

vol'umed (vŏl'ūmd), a. 1. Having the form of a volume, or roll; in rounded masses; as, volumed mist.

2. Having volume, or bulk; massive; great.

3. Having (such or so many) volumes.

vol'u-me-nom'e-ter (-ū-mē-nŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [L. volumen volume + E. -meter.] Physics. An instrument for measuring the volume (and hence, indirectly, the specific gravity) of a body, especially a solid, by means of the difference in tension caused by its presence and absence in a closed air space. — vol'u-me-nom'e-try (vŏl'ū-mē-nŏm'ē-trĭ), n.

vo-lu'me-scope (vŏ-lū'mē-skōp), n. [volume + -scope.] Physics. An instrument consisting essentially of a glass tube provided with a graduated scale, for exhibiting to the eye the changes of volume of a gas or gaseous mixture resulting from chemical action, and the like.

vo-lu'me-ter (vŏ-lū'mē-tĕr), n. [Cf. F. volumètre. See VOLUMETRIC.] Physics. a An instrument for measuring volumes, as of gases or liquids directly, or of solids by displacement of a liquid. b A form of hydrometer.

vol'u-met'ric (vŏl'ū-mĕt'rĭk) } a. [volume + metric.] Of vol'u-met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl) } or pertaining to the measurement of volume. — vol'u-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

volumetric analysis, Chem., quantitative analysis by the use of definite volumes of standardized solutions of reagents; also, analysis of gases by volume, as by the eudiometer.

vo-lu'mi-nos'i-ty (vŏ-lū'mĭ-nŏs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality or state of being voluminous.

vo-lu'mi-nous (vŏ-lū'mĭ-nŭs), a. [L. voluminosus full of folds.] Of or pertaining to volume or volumes. Specif.: a Consisting of many folds, coils, or convolutions.

But ended foul in many a scaly fold,

b Of great volume, or bulk; large; swelling. B. Jonson. c Consisting of many volumes or books; as, voluminous collections. d Having written much, or produced many volumes; copious; as, a voluminous writer. — vo-lu'mi-nous-ly, adv. — vo-lu'mi-nous-ness, n.

Vö'lund (vû'lōond), n. [Icel. Völundr. See WAYLAND.] Norse Myth. A king of the elves and a wonderful smith in Teutonic legends and even in those of Romanized France. King Nithuer, who had been robbed of his treasure, cut the sinews of Völund's knees and confined him in a forge on an island, but Völund killed the king's two sons, violated the king's daughter, and escaped by flying. His adventures are told in the "Song of Völund" in the Elder Edda. See WAYLAND.

vol'un-ta-rism (vŏl'ŭn-tă-rĭz'm), n. Philos. Any theory which conceives will to be the dominant factor in experience or in the constitution of the world; — contrasted with intellectualism. Schopenhauer and Fichte are typical exponents of the two types of metaphysical voluntarism, Schopenhauer teaching that the evolution of the universe is the activity of a blind and irrational will, Fichte holding that the intelligent activity of the ego is the fundamental fact of reality.

On the whole, his [Wundt's] voluntarism, though like that of Schopenhauer and Hartmann, is not the same; not Schopenhauer's, because the ideating will of Wundt's philosophy is not a universal irrational will; and not Hartmann's, because, although ideating will, according to Wundt's phenomenalism, is supposed to extend through the world of organisms, the whole inorganic world remains a mere object of unitary experience.

Thos. Case (Encyc. Brit.)

vol'un-ta-rist (-rĭst), n. An adherent of voluntarism.

vol'un-ta-ris'tic (-rĭs'tĭk), a. Of or pert. to voluntarism.

vol'un-ta-ry (vŏl'ŭn-tă-rĭ), a. [L. voluntarius, fr. voluntas will, choice, fr. the root of velle to will, p. pr. volens; akin to E. will. See WILL, v. t.; cf. BENEVOLENT, VOLITION, VOLUNTEER.] 1. Proceeding from the will; produced in or by an act of choice; as, voluntary action.

2. Unconstrained by interference; unimpelled by another's influence; spontaneous; acting of one's self or itself; free.

Our voluntary service he requires. Milton.

3. Done by design or intention; intentional; purposed; intended; not accidental; as, voluntary manslaughter.

4. Of or pertaining to the will; subject to, or regulated by, the will; as, the voluntary motions or muscles.

5. Able to will; free; as, man is a voluntary agent.

6. Law. Acting, or done, of one's own free will without valuable consideration; acting, or done, without any present legal obligation to do the thing done, or any such obligation that can accrue from the existing state of affairs.

7. Of or pertaining to voluntaryism; as, a voluntary church, in distinction from an established or state church.

Syn. — VOLUNTARY, INTENTIONAL, DELIBERATE are here compared in their ordinary uses. VOLUNTARY (for legal uses see defs.) emphasizes the idea of freedom from constraint, and is often opposed to accidental; INTENTIONAL heightens the implication of design; that is DELIBERATE which is done advisedly or after consideration; as, voluntary confession or manslaughter, an intentional insult, a deliberate falsehood. See WILL, INTENTION, SPONTANEOUS.

voluntary affidavit or oath, Law, an affidavit or oath made in an extrajudicial matter. — v. conveyance, Law, a conveyance without valuable consideration. — v. escape. Law. See 4th ESCAPE, 2. — v. jurisdiction, *Eng. vo-lute' (vŏ-lūt'), n. [F. volute (cf. It. voluta), L. voluta, fr. volvere, volutum, to roll. See VOLUBLE.] 1. Arch. A spiral scroll-shaped ornament, esp. that which forms the chief feature of the Ionic capital, and which, on a much smaller scale, is a feature in the Corinthian and Composite capitals. See CAPITAL and ORDER, Illusts.

2. Zoöl. A turn, or whorl, of a spiral shell.

3. Any of numerous marine rachiglossate gastropods of Voluta and allied genera of the family Volutidæ. Their shell is usually rather thick, has a short spire, wide aperture, conspicuous columellar folds, and commonly is inoperculate. They occur in all warm seas, but esp. in the Indian and South Pacific Oceans. Many of the species are ornamented with plaits, spines, ridges, etc., or are handsomely colored. Cf. MUSIC SHELL.

Volute, 3 (Voluta imperialis). 1/4

volute compass. See COMPASS, n., 8. — v. spring, a spring formed of a spiral coil of plate, rod, or wire, extended or extensible in the direction of the axis of the coil, in which direction its elastic force is exerted. See SPRING, Illust.

vo-lut'ed (vŏ-lūt'ĕd), a. Having a volute, or spiral scroll.

vo-lu'tion (vŏ-lū'shŭn), n. [Cf. LL. volutio an arch, vault. See VOLUTE.] 1. A rolling; revolving; a twist; a spiral turn or wreath; a convolution.

2. Zoöl. A whorl of a spiral shell; a volute.

vol'va (vŏl'vă), n. [L. volva, vulva, covering.] A membranous sac inclosing the young sporophore of many agaricaceous fungi, as Amanita. It is ruptured by the expanding pileus and remains usually as a cup at the base of the stipe. Its presence or absence is often an important distinguishing character. Cf. VELUM, 3 a; see DEATH CUP, Illust.

Vol'va (vŏl'vă), Völ'va (vûl'vä), n.; Icel. pl. VÖLUR (vû'lōor). [Icel. völva.] Norse Folklore. A woman skilled in magic and soothsaying or having prophetic or clairvoyant powers.

vol'vate (vŏl'vāt), a. Bot. Provided with, or characterized by, a volva.

vol-velle' (vŏl-vĕl'), n. Also vol-vell'. [Perh. fr. L. volvere to roll (cf. REVOLVE), through OF., or assumed LL. volvella or volvellum.] a An old contrivance for ascertaining the time of the rising and setting of the moon and sun, the time of high and low tide, etc.; — called also lunary. It consists of one or more movable circles with pointers and figures of the moon and sun, etc., which are placed upon several graduated and figured circles drawn on the leaf of a book. b Any similar contrivance for showing variations.

Vol'vox (vŏl'vŏks), n. [NL., fr. L. volvere to roll.] Bot. A genus of minute, pale green, globular organisms, about one fiftieth of an inch in diameter, found rolling though water, the motion being produced by minute colorless flagella. It has been considered as belonging to the flagellate Infusoria, but is generally considered a vegetable, and each globule a colony of many individuals. The commonest species is Volvox globator, often called globe animalcule.

vo'lvu-lus (-vū-lŭs), n. [NL., fr. L. volvere to turn about, to roll.] Med. a Spasmodic contraction of the intestines causing colic. b Any twisting or displacement of the intestines causing obstruction; ileus. See ILEUS.

vo'mer (vō'mĕr), n. [L., a plowshare.] Anat. & Zoöl. 1. A bone of the skull of most vertebrates, situated below the ethmoidal region. It develops from lateral halves which remain separate in some animals. In man it forms a vertical plate, pointed in front and expanding at the upper back part into lateral alæ, or wings, whence the name plowshare bone. It forms part of the nasal septum. The vomer of teleost fishes forms the front part of the roof of the mouth and often bears teeth.

2. The pygostyle.

vo'mer-ine (vō'mĕr-ĭn; vŏm'ĕr-), a. Pert. to the vomer.

vom'i-ca (vŏm'ĭ-kă), n. [L., an abscess, perh. fr. vomere to discharge, vomit.] Med. a An abscess cavity in the lungs. b An abscess in any other parenchymatous organ.

vom'it (-ĭt), n. [L. vomitus, fr. vomere, vomitum, to vomit; akin to Gr. ἐμεῖν, Skr. vam, Lith. vemti. Cf. EMETIC, VOMITO.] 1. That which is vomited; esp., matter ejected from the stomach through the mouth.

2. That which excites vomiting; an emetic. Shak.

3. Paper Making. The hood or cover of a rag boiler by which the liquid forced up by the steam from the central steam pipe is distributed over the boiler.

vom'it, v. i.; VOM'IT-ED; VOM'IT-ING. [Cf. L. vomere, vomitum, and v. freq. vomitare. See VOMIT, n.] 1. To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth; to puke; spew.

2. To be ejected or emitted; to come forth violently.

vom'it, v. t. 1. To throw up; to eject from the stomach through the mouth; to spew; — often with up or out.

The fish . . . vomited out Jonah. Jonah ii. 10.

2. Hence, to eject violently from any hollow place; to belch forth; as, volcanoes vomit lava.

vom'it-ing, n. Spasmodic ejection of matter from the stomach through the mouth; also, matter vomited; vomit.

vom'i-to (vŏm'ĭ-tō; Sp. vō'mē-tō), n. [Sp. vómito, fr. L. vomitus. See VOMIT, n.] Med. The yellow fever in its worst form, usually attended with black vomit (which see).

vom'it-o-ry, n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). 1. An emetic.

vom'i-tu-ri'tion (-tū-rĭsh'ŭn), n. [Cf. F. vomiturition.] Med. a Repeated ineffectual attempts at vomiting; retching. b The vomiting of but little matter; also, that vomiting which is effected with little effort.

von Baer's law (fŏn bâr'z). [After K. E. von Baer, German embryologist.] Biol. The principle that the development of an organism is a progress from the general to the special, and that the embryos belonging to various classes closely resemble one another in their earlier stages, but diverge more and more as development proceeds.

voo'doo (vōō'dōō; vōō-dōō'), n. [Perh. (through Creole French vaudoux a negro sorcerer) of African origin; cf. Ashanti obosôm tutelary spirit, fetish, or a dial. form (at Whydah, according to Sir Richard Burton) vodun a fetish; or perh. fr. F. Vaudois Waldensian, because the Waldenses were accused of sorcery.] 1. = VOODOOISM.

2. One who practices voodooism; a negro sorcerer.

voo'doo, a. Of or pertaining to voodooism or a voodoo.

voo'doo (vōō'dōō; vōō-dōō'), v. t.; VOO'DOOED (-dōōd'; -dōōd'), VOO'DOO-ING. To affect by voodoo sorcery; to bewitch.

voo'doo-ism (-ĭz'm), n. [See VOODOO.] A degraded form of superstition and sorcery, said to include human sacrifices and cannibalism in some rites. It is prevalent among the negroes of Haiti, and to some extent in the United States, and is regarded as a relic of African barbarism.

vo-ra'cious (vō-rā'shŭs), a. [L. vorax, -acis, fr. vorare to devour; akin to Gr. βορά meat, food, βιβρώσκειν to devour, Skr. gar. Cf. DEVOUR.] Greedy in eating; very hungry; ravenous; gluttonous; rapacious; as, a voracious man or appetite; a voracious gulf or whirlpool. Dampier.

Syn. — See GREEDY.

vo-rac'i-ty (vō-răs'ĭ-tĭ), n. [L. voracitas: cf. F. voracité.] Quality of being voracious; voraciousness.

vo-rag'i-nous (vō-răj'ĭ-nŭs), a. [L. voraginosus, fr. vorago an abyss, fr. vorare to swallow up.] Pertaining to a gulf; full of gulfs; hence, devouring. Rare. Mallet.

vo'rant (vō'rănt; 201), a. [L. vorans, -antis, p. pr.] Her. Depicted as if swallowing its prey whole.

vo-raz' (vō-răs'; 268), n. [Sp., voracious.] A West Indian snapper (Aprion macrophthalmus) having the body rose-red above and silvery below.

-vorous. [L. -vorus (as in carnivorous carnivorous), fr. vorare to devour.] A combining form signifying eating, feeding on, consuming; as in herbivorous. Cf. -PHAGOUS.

vor'tex (vôr'tĕks), n.; pl. E. -TEXES (-tĕk-sĕz), L. VORTICES (-tĭ-sēz). [L. vortex, var. of vertex, -icis, fr. vortere, vertere, to turn. See VERTEX.] 1. A mass of fluid, esp. of a liquid, having a whirling or circular motion tending to form a cavity or vacuum in the center of the circle, and to draw towards this bodies subject to its action; the form assumed by a fluid in such motion; a whirlpool; eddy.

2. A supposed collection of particles of very subtile matter, endowed with a rapid rotary motion around an axis which was also the axis of a sun or a planet. Descartes attempted to account for the formation of the universe, and the movements of the bodies composing it, by a theory of vortexes.

3. [cap.] Zoöl. A genus of small rhabdocœlous Turbellaria. They have the mouth ventral and near the anterior end of the body, the pharynx cask-shaped, and the generative opening single.

4. Naut. A whirlwind. Rare.

vortex of the heart, Anat., the spiral arrangement of the muscular fibers at the apex of the heart.

vortex filament. A vortex tube of infinitesimal cross section.

vortex fringe. The region immediately surrounding a disk moving flatwise through air; — so called because the air has a cyclic motion as in a vortex ring.

vortex line. A line, within a rotating fluid, whose tangent at every point is the instantaneous axis of rotation at that point of the fluid.

vortex plate. A thin plate of metal or other elastic material for the illustration of the modes of vibration of sounding bodies, as in sonorous figures (which see).

vortex ring. Physics. A ring-shaped mass of moving fluid which, by virtue of its motion of rotation around an axis disposed in circular form, attains a more or less distinct separation from the surrounding medium and has many of the properties of a solid.

vortex sheet. An imaginary surface or layer within a rotating fluid, made by drawing the vortex lines through every point of any given line within the fluid.

vortex theory. Chem. & Physics. The theory, advanced by Thomson (Lord Kelvin) on the basis of investigations by Helmholtz, that the atoms are vortically moving ring-shaped masses (or masses of other forms having a similar internal motion) of a homogeneous, incompressible, frictionless fluid. Various properties of such atoms (vortex atoms) can be mathematically deduced.

vortex tube. Physics. An imaginary tube within a rotating fluid, formed by drawing the vortex lines through all points of a closed curve.

vor'ti-cal (vôr'tĭ-kăl), a. Of or pertaining to a vortex or vortexes; resembling a vortex in form or motion; whirling; as, a vortical motion. — vor'ti-cal-ly, adv.

vortical motion, motion of a fluid in which infinitesimal rectilinear elements rotate about an axis, or in which the velocity curl does not equal 0.

Vor'ti-cel'la (-sĕl'ă), n. [NL., dim. fr. L. vortex. See VORTEX.] 1. Zoöl. A genus of Infusoria having a more or less bell-shaped body with a circle of vibrating cilia around the oral disk, supported on a slender, contractile stem. They occur both in salt and fresh water, usually in colonies on submerged object. Vorticella and many closely allied genera constitute a family, Vor'ti-cel'lĭ-dæ (-sĕl'ĭ-dē).

Vorticella, much enlarged.

2. [l. c.] L. pl. -LÆ (-ē). Any species of Vorticella or of the family Vorticellidæ.

Vul'can (vŭl'kăn), n. [L. Vulcanus, Volcanus; cf. Skr. ulkā firebrand, meteor. Cf. VOLCANO.] 1. Rom. Relig. The god of the fiery element, esp. in its fearful aspects, whose cult, according to tradition, was brought to Rome by the Sabine king Titus Tatius. Later he was identified with the Greek Hephæstus and was hence represented as consort of Venus and god of metal working. His earlier consort was Maja or Majesta, to whom an offering was made on May first. The feast of Vulcan was the Volcanalia, Aug. 23, celebrated in imperial times with games at the Circus. See DI.

2. Astron. A hypothetical intramercurial planet the existence of which has not yet been established by observation.

3. [l. c.] A volcano. Obs.

F. vulgate. See VULGAR, a.] 1. A Latin version of the Scriptures made by Jerome at the close of the 4th century; — so called from its common use in the Latin Church. The Old Testament was translated mostly from the Hebrew and Aramaic, with conformity to the Septuagint, and the New Testament revised from older Latin versions with the aid of Greek manuscripts. Jerome's Latin is nearest to that of the Italian family of Old Latin versions, which is a revision of the European family, which in turn is an independent version from, or early revision of, the African family believed by many to include the oldest Latin versions. See VERSION. This is the only Latin version which the Roman Catholic Church admits to be authentic. See DOUAY BIBLE.

2. [l. c.] Any vulgate text, as of the writings of Æschylus.

He worked upon a vulgate, or textus receptus [of Homer], which nearly all our MSS. represent. James Gow.

W

W (dŭb'l-ū). 1. The twenty-third letter of the English alphabet. The sound of W is usually a consonant as in we, a voiced bilabial fricative formed by raising the back of the tongue as for ōō while rounding the lips so much as to cause a slight friction of the breath. If the rounding is insufficient to cause this consonantal friction the resulting sound is the vowel or vowel glide forming the second element of certain diphthongs, as in few, how, to which its use as a vowel is limited in English. The form of the letter (see ALPHABET, Illust.) dates back to the time when U and V had not been fully differentiated (see U, V). The form vv occurs in English as early as the 11th century, later becoming w, replacing wyn (see WYN). Etymologically W is most closely related to V and U. See V, and U. See Guide to Pron., § 256.

2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate: a [cap.] Chem. Wolfram (tungsten). b Elec. Watt.

2. That which is risked on an uncertain event; a stake; prize; bet.

3. Act of wagering, or betting; a bet. At the early common law a wager was not invalid as such, but was rendered invalid by any circumstance connected with it rendering its enforcement contrary to public policy, as where it was as to the sex of a person, or in restraint of marriage, or upon the outcome of a trial in court. A wager may take the form of a contract, called a wagering, or gambling, contract. Contracts of this nature include various common forms of valid commercial contracts, as contracts of insurance, contracts dealing in futures, options, etc. Other wagering contracts and bets are now generally made illegal by statute against betting and gambling, and wagering has in many cases been made a criminal offense.

4. That on which bets are laid; the subject of a bet. Rare.

5. [Perh. fr. OF. wagier, var. of gagier, inf. as n. Cf. WAGER a bet, gager giving a gage.] Act of gaging, or giving a pledge, to do something or to abide the event of something; as, wager of battle; wager of law (see below). Obs. or Hist.

wager of law, Early Eng. Law, the act of a party having the negative, usually the defendant, in an action in giving a pledge, or in binding himself, to resort to and abide the event of an attempt to prove his case by the oath of himself and the required number of oath helpers, or compurgators. In early times various courts civil and criminal were so settled, and the required number of oath helpers varied both with the rank of the parties and the nature of the offense or default. The procedure survived into modern times as a peculiarity of the actions of detinue and debt. It was abolished in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 42, § 13, having already been long practically obsolete.

wa'ges (wā'jĕz; -jĭz; 151), pl. of WAGE, n. (see WAGE, n., Note). Specif.: 1. Pay given for labor, usually manual or mechanical, at short stated intervals, as distinguished from salaries or fees.

2. Theoretical Economics. The share of the annual product or national dividend which goes as a reward to labor, as distinct from the remuneration received by capital in its various forms. This economic or technical sense of the word wages is broader than the current sense, and includes not only amounts actually paid to laborers, but the remuneration obtained by those who sell the products of their own work, and the wages of superintendence or management, which are earned by skill in directing the work of others.

Syn. — WAGES, HIRE, SALARY, STIPEND, PAY, EMOLUMENT. WAGES and HIRE (the latter in what sense) denote the price paid for labor, esp. by the day or week; as, a day laborer's, carpenter's, cook's wages; "The laborer is worthy of his hire" (Luke x. 7). SALARY and STIPEND (the latter Scottish or archaic for a clergyman's salary) denote a fixed compensation, commonly paid at longer intervals than wages, for services (often professional) which require training or ability; as, the salary of a minister, a teacher, a bank president, a consul. PAY, which is often general in its sense, may be equivalent esp. to wages (as in pay day, pay roll, etc.); more specifically, it is used with reference to soldiers; as, an officer on half pay. EMOLUMENT applies to whatever profits arise from office or employment; as, "the emoluments of a profession" (Gibbon); "A worthier successor wears his dignity and pockets his emoluments" (Hawthorne). See PAY.

Waldo and his followers were devoted to Bible reading and public preaching, and sought to revive primitive pureness of living. They desired to remain in the Roman Catholic Church, but were forced to become a separate body. Their polity was a modified episcopacy and their theology had features resembling Protestantism, esp. in rejecting purgatory and in cultivating Scripture knowledge. Coming into connection with the Bohemian Brethren in the 15th, and the Reformation in the 16th, century, they were led to profess Protestant principles. Their chief seats were the alpine valleys of the old provinces of Dauphiné and Provence in France and Piedmont in Italy, in which last they still survive in considerable numbers. They were formerly subjected to many and great persecutions on the part of the ecclesiastical and political authorities, notably in 1655, when they were so severely treated that Cromwell called upon the Protestant nations to interfere in their behalf.

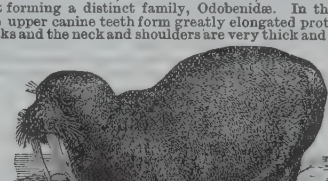
wal'rus (wôl'rŭs; wŏl'-; 277), n. [D. walrus; of Scand. origin; cf. Dan. valros, hvalros, Sw. vallross, Norw. hvalros; lit., whale horse; akin to Icel. hrosshvalr, AS. horshwæl. See WHALE; HORSE.] A very large marine mammal (Odobenus rosmarus) of the Arctic Ocean, allied to the seals but forming a distinct family, Odobenidæ. In the male the upper canine teeth form greatly elongated protruding tusks and the neck and shoulders are very thick and heavy.



Walrus.

Individuals often weigh over a ton. The female has smaller, slenderer tusks. The skin makes valuable leather, the tusks are fine ivory, and the blubber yields oil. The animals have been much hunted, and are now rare except in the far north. The walrus of Bering Sea and northward is larger than the Atlantic animal and is usually regarded as a variety or distinct species (O. obesus).

GUERRILLA, WARRIOR.] 1. The state or fact of exerting violence or force against another, now only against a state or other politically organized body; esp., a contest by force between two or more nations or states, carried on for any purpose; armed conflict of sovereign powers; declared and open hostilities. As commonly classified war between nations, or states, is a public, or international, war, and this is called a perfect war when between whole states, and imperfect war when limited as to places, persons, and things. When begun by a formal declaration it is a solemn war. When between a state and a part of it in rebellion it is a civil war. The United States Constitution (Art. I., § 8, cl. 11) provides that Congress shall have power "to declare war, to grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water."

War is said to be that state in which a nation prosecutes its right by force. (the Prize Cases, 2 Black. 635, 673). Cooley.

Every contention by force between two nations in external matters, under the authority of their respective governments, is not only war, but public war. 4 D. S. (Dall.) 37, 42.

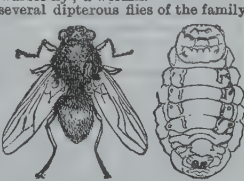
2. The maggot of the warble fly; a wormil.

warble fly. Any of several dipterous flies of the family (Estridæ whose larvæ live under the skin of cattle and other mammals. The ox warble flies (Hypoderma lineata and H. bovis) are the most important species. The adult lays its eggs on the feet and legs of cattle, whence they are licked off and hatch in the mouth or esophagus. The larvæ then burrow through the tissues to the skin and beneath it to the back of the animal, where they live until ready to pupate. They cause large painful swellings, known as warbles, which are not dangerous, but interfere with the animal's nutrition and injure the hide for use as leather.



Warble Fly. Adult and Larva, slightly enlarged.

war'bler (wôr'blẽr), n. 1. One that warbles; a singer; songster; — applied chiefly to birds.

2. Any of numerous small Old World singing birds of the family Sylviidæ, many of which are noted songsters. The bluethroat, whitethroat, blackcap (in senses a & e), reed warbler, and sedge warbler (see these terms) are well-known species. They are allied to the thrushes more closely than to the American warblers, being represented in the United States only by the kinglets and gnat catchers.

Warblers, 3. A Hooded Warbler (Wilsonia citrina). B Worm-eating Warbler (Helmitheros vermivorus). C Cape May Warbler (Dendroica tigrina). All Male.

3. Any of about a hundred species (collectively called wood warblers) of mostly very small and bright-colored American singing birds constituting the family Mniotiltidæ. They are insectivorous, highly migratory, and chiefly arboreal; their song is generally weak and unmusical, but very characteristic for each species. Their common names are mostly descriptive of color, as: black-and-white warbler (Mniotilta varia), blackpoll warbler (Dendroica striata), black-throated blue w. (D. cærulescens), chestnut-sided w. (D. pennsylvanica), redpoll w. (D. palmarum), yellow w. (D. æstiva), golden-winged w. (Helminthophila chrysoptera), orange-crowned w. (H. celata), and hooded w. (Wilsonia citrina). -wert, G. -wärts, Icel -verðr, Goth. -walrps, L. vertere to turn, versus toward, and E. worth to become. See WORTH, v. i.; cf. VERSION. The s in -wards (AS. -weardes) was orig. a genitive ending.] Suffixes denoting course or direction to; motion or tendency toward. They are added to adverbs and prepositions, as in backward, backwards, upward, upwards, etc.; and to nouns indicating a direction or terminal point, as in eastward, eastwards, homeward, homewards, etc. The forms in -ward are often used as adjectives as well as adverbs; as in downward, homeward.

☞ Some writers have tried to make distinctions of usage between forward, backward, downward, etc., and the corresponding forms in -wards; but the choice between them is in general influenced simply by euphony, sometimes perhaps by the fact that -wards is adverbial only. The forms in -ward have in most cases been longer in use, although those in -wards are equally good etymologically.

☞ The reference "See -WARD, -WARDS" is sometimes given as the only definition of a word ending in -ward, -wards, if its meaning can readily be gathered from the definitions of the suffixes and the root word.

war dance. A dance among savages preliminary to war.

Ward'–Bur'ton magazine rifle (wôrd'bûr'tŭn). An early American bolt gun from which were developed the Kropatschek and Lebel rifles. ward'ship (wôrd'shĭp), n. 1. Office of a ward or keeper; care and protection of a ward; guardianship; right of guardianship; specif., Early Eng. Feudal Law, the right to the custody of the body of an infant heir of a tenant by knight's service or military sergeanty, by socage, or by copyhold, and to the custody of the ward's property. The wardship belonged to the lord (to the king in case the dead man was a tenant in capite) in case of a military tenure; in case of socage tenure, in general, to the next of kin to whom the property could not descend. In both cases it originally carried with it the right to dispose of the ward in marriage and to retain the rents and profits of his land subject to the ward's right to suitable support. The guardian in socage, however, early became responsible to the ward for the rents and profits and lost the right to sell the ward's marriage, and his guardianship terminated when the ward reached 15 years of age. In case of copyhold tenure, the lord was guardian, but accountable like the guardian in socage. Wardships of military tenures ceased with the abolition of military tenures. A similar right of wardship existed in the Scots feudal law.

warrant officer. Mil. & Nav. a In the United States army, a noncommissioned officer, holding his appointment from the regimental or battalion commander. Rare. b In the United States navy, a subordinate officer appointed, or warranted, by the President, whose duties are, in general, indicated by his title, such as gunner, boatswain, carpenter, machinist, pharmacist, or sailmaker. A commissioned officer receives a commission from the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. A warrant officer receives his warrant without such advice and consent. After serving as warrant officers for six years, boatswains, gunners, carpenters, machinists, and sailmakers (no more sailmakers will be appointed) may be commissioned chief boatswain, chief gunner, etc., to rank with, but after, an ensign. The term commissioned officers does not, however, usually include the chief warrant officers. c In the British navy, a subordinate officer of similar standing.

war'ran-tor' (wŏr'ăn-tôr'), n. Law. One who warrants.

war'ran-ty (-ăn-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [OF. warantie, F. garantie. See WARRANT, n.; cf. GUARANTY.] 1. Real Estate Law. Orig., the undertaking or obligation of a feudal lord to defend his vassal tenant in the possession of the land held of him as lord (whether originally received by the lord by commendation or not), or to give the tenant lands of equal value; hence, a covenant real whereby the grantor of an estate of freehold and his heirs were bound to warrant and defend the title, and, in case of eviction by title paramount, to yield other lands of equal value in recompense. A warranty imposed upon an heir of lands which had not, and could not have, descended from the warranting ancestor was a collateral warranty, as where a father granted with warranty lands held by him only by the right of curtesy. Such warranties were annulled by the statute of 4 Anne c. 16. This warranty has long since become obsolete, and its place supplied by personal covenants for title. Among these is the covenant of warranty, often called a warranty simply, which runs with the land, and is in the nature of a real covenant, breach of which gives a claim for damages only. In some jurisdictions this warranty is implied, without being expressly stated, in statutory short forms of conveyance.
3. Insurance Law. A statement or engagement expressly or impliedly made in a policy by the party insured, that a certain fact relating to the subject of insurance or the risk exists or shall exist, or that some act relating thereto has been done or shall be done. It must be literally true or fulfilled or the policy is void, it operating essentially as a condition precedent to the insurance, and it is distinguished from a representation, which is an inducement and need be only substantially true or fulfilled.
4. Justificatory mandate or precept; authority; justification; warrant; as, he had no warranty for his act. R. Shak.
5. Security; warrant; guaranty. Obs. or Scot.

DROPSY, HYDRA, OTTER, WET, WHISKY.] 1. The fluid which descends from the clouds in rain, and which forms rivers, lakes, seas, etc. Pure water consists of hydrogen (11.186 per cent by weight) and oxygen (88.814 per cent), H_2O, and is an odorless, tasteless, transparent liquid, which is very slightly compressible. It has a slight blue color which is observable only in thick layers of the liquid. At its maximum density, 39° Fahr. or 4° C., it is the standard for specific gravities, one cubic centimeter weighing one gram. It is also the standard for specific heats. Its own specific heat is very great. It freezes at 32° Fahr. or 0° C. and boils at 212° Fahr. or 100° C. (see ICE, 1; STEAM, 1). Pure water is an extremely poor conductor of the electric current, though many aqueous solutions are conductors. See ELECTROLYTE. Water is the most important of solvents, dissolving many gases, liquids, and solids. Natural waters of the earth, as those of springs, rivers, or the ocean, contain more or less dissolved matter, which is mostly removed by distillation. Rain water is nearly pure. See HARDNESS, 3; LIMEWATER; MINERAL WATER; OCEAN, 1. Water is important chemically as a solvent and dissociating agent, as a catalytic agent, and often as one of the substances taking part in a reaction. It is essential to the life of animals and plants. Water passes by evaporation into the state of vapor; hence, there is always water vapor in the atmosphere, whence by condensation are formed the clouds, and rain, snow, etc.
2. A form, variety, or aspect of the fluid; specif.: a Rain. b A mineral water; as, to take the waters at Karlsbad. c A wave; a flood; — usually in the pl. "The peril of waters, winds, and rocks." Shak. d Dew. Dial. Eng.
3. A body of water, standing or flowing; a lake, river, sea, stream, or other body of water. Now Rare, exc. Scot. & Dial., or as used in proper names.

Remembering he had passed over a small water a poor scholar when first coming to the university, he kneeled. Fuller.

4. The district bordering a river. Obs. Scot. & Dial. Eng.
5. pl. A watering place; — with the. Dial. Eng.
6. Any organic liquid, secretion, effusion, humor, or the like, resembling or likened to water, as tears, sweat, a rheum, serous or synovial effusion or exudate, etc.; esp.: a Urine. b pl. The amniotic fluid (see AMNION, 1 a).
7. A distilled fluid, essence, or the like.

All distilled goods, . . . as aniseed, clove, cinnamon, or any other water. G. Smith (1725).

8. Pharm. A solution in water of a gaseous or readily volatile substance; as, ammonia water. Cf. AQUA.
9. The limpidity and luster of a precious stone, esp. a diamond; as, a diamond of the first water, that is, perfectly pure and transparent. Hence, of the first water, that is, of the first excellence.
10. A wavy lustrous pattern or decoration such as is imparted to linen, silk, metals, etc. See WATER, v. t., 3.
11. Finance. An addition to the shares or other securities issued by a stock company not representing a corresponding increase in assets, the effect being to increase the par value of the shares, but diminish, or "dilute," the actual value per share. Cant.
above water, floating; hence, out of difficulty or embarrassment, as of a financial nature. — under w., below the surface of the water. — w. bewitched, drink much diluted, as weak tea or grog; hence, any flat or insipid compound. Obs. or Dial. Eng. — w. of Ayr, w.-of-Ayr stone, Ayr stone. — w. of crystallization, Chem., water which is regarded as present (chemically combined) in many crystallized substances, and which is expelled from them by heat, usually with loss by the substance of its crystalline properties. Thus, while pure copper sulphate, $CuSO_4$, is a white amorphous substance, blue vitriol, the crystallized form, $CuSO_4 \cdot 5H_2O$, contains five molecules of water. Sometimes such a substance breaks down by stages and a certain proportion of water may be held more tenaciously than the rest. This water is often called water of constitution, but it does not differ in nature from other water of hydration. — water of hydration, Chem., water chemically combined with some substance to form a hydrate. — w. of imbibition, Physics, the maximum amount of water which a substance can imbibe, or absorb, and hold, as a sponge removed from water; specif., the maximum amount of water which can be held by a rock or earth above the zone of ground water. — w. of life. a Bib. That which gives to a person spiritual or eternal life; spiritual refreshment, or the like; salvation. Rev. xxii. 1. b Brandy, whisky, or other alcoholic drink; — a translation of various non-English names, as eau de vie, usquebaugh, or aqua vitæ. — w. on the brain, Med., hydrocephalus. — w. on the chest, Med., hydrothorax. — w. on the knee, Med., an accumulation of inflammatory exudate in the knee joint, often following an injury. — w. scavenger beetle, any water beetle of the family Hydrophilidæ. — w. white oak, the overcup oak.

wa′ter (wô′tẽr), v. t.; WA′TERED (-tẽrd); WA′TER-ING. [AS. wæterian.] 1. To wet or supply with water or watery fluid; to moisten, sprinkle, or soak with water; to overflow with water; to irrigate; as, to water the street; to water flowers. "With tears watering the ground." Milton.
2. To supply with water for drink; to cause or allow to drink; as, to water cattle and horses.
3. To wet and calender, as cloth, so as to impart to it a lustrous appearance in wavy lines; to diversify with wavelike lines; as, to water silk. Cf. WATER, n., 10.
4. To add water to (anything), thus increasing quantity while reducing strength; to dilute; weaken.
5. Finance. To add to the aggregate par value of (stock or other securities) without a corresponding addition to the assets represented by it.

wa′ter, v. i. 1. To shed, secrete, or fill with, water or liquid matter; as, the mouth waters; his eyes water.
2. To get or take in water; specif., usually of animals, to drink water; as, the ship put into port to water.

While their horses watered. Sir T. Browne.

water arum. The Calla palustris. See CALLA, 1.

water ash. a Any of several North American ashes, as Fraxinus nigra, F. floridana, etc.; specif., F. caroliniana, of river swamps of the southern United States. b Box elder.

water back. A back (water cistern) used in brewing.

water back. A water heater set in the back of a stove or fireplace.

water bailiff. 1. An officer of the customs, whose duty it is to search vessels. Eng.
2. Any of various former British officials having certain jurisdiction over the water; as: a Any of several London officials, superseded in 1771, having jurisdiction over fishing on the Thames. b Any of certain officials, done away with in 1885, in the Isle of Man having jurisdiction over fishery and certain maritime jurisdiction.

water ballast. Naut. Water in specially constructed compartments in a vessel's hold, to serve as ballast.

water bar. 1. Road Making. A ridge made across a hill road to divert rain water to one side.
2. A bar inserted in a joint, as between the wood and stone sills of a window, to prevent passage of water. Eng.

water barometer. Physics. A barometer containing, in place of mercury, a column of water, which requires to be about thirty-three feet in height.

water battery. 1. Elec. A voltaic battery in which the electrolyte is water.
2. Mil. A battery nearly on a level with the water.

water bear. A tardigrade.

water bearing. Mach. A bearing lubricated by water forced continuously between the bearing surfaces.

water bed. A waterproof mattress filled with water, sometimes used for bedridden patients.

water beech. a American hornbeam. b The plane tree.

Water Beetle (Dytiscus). a Adult, nat. size; b Larva.

water beetle. Any of numerous aquatic beetles belonging to Dytiscus and allied genera of the family Dytiscidæ and to various genera of the closely related families Amphizoidæ, Haliplidæ, Gyrinidæ (see whirligig beetle), and Hydrophilidæ, the last belonging to the clavicorn beetles, the others to the adephagous series. In form they are all much alike, being oval and flattened; and they are usually black or dark colored and highly polished. They swim with great agility, their fringed hind legs acting together as oars.

water bird. Any aquatic bird; a swimming or wading bird; a waterfowl.

water bottle. 1. A bottle, as of rubber or glass, for containing water.
2. A specially constructed vessel for collecting samples of water at any desired depth.

wa′ter bou′get (bo͞o′jĕt). 1. Formerly, a leather bag for carrying water, as for soldiers' use, suspending one at each end of a pole or yoke.
2. Her. A conventional representation of a pair of the foregoing, used as a charge.

Water Bouget, 2.

water brain. Veter. Gid.

water buck. a A large, long-haired reddish or grayish brown antelope (Kobus ellipsiprymnus)

the woman spoken of; our watch, ourselves, us; my watch, myself. Cf. NABS. Old Cant.

watch bell. a Prob., a bell to alarm the watch. Obs. b Naut. A bell struck each half hour; — now called ship's bell.

watch cap. A knitted close-fitting navy blue cap worn by enlisted men in the United States navy in cold or storm.

watch clock. 1. Something that awakes; an alarm. Obs. 2. = WATCHMAN'S CLOCK.

watch coat. Rarely, watch cloak. [Delaware Indian wachgütey petticoat, watchcoat.] Chiefly Naut. A heavy overcoat worn in rough or cold weather, as by a watch officer; also, a pea-jacket or reefer.

watch′ed (wŏch′ĕd; -ĕt), watch′et (-ĕt). Dial. Eng. vars. of WET-SHOD.

watch′et, a. & n. [ME. wachet; cf. OF. wachet a sort of stuff (cloth), wache a sort of stuff, gachiér a coarse cloth.] Designating a pale or light blue color, cloth, or angling fly. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

watch guard. A chain, cord, or the like, by which a watch is attached to the person.

watch′wise′ (-wīz′), adv. = CLOCKWISE.

wate. † WAIT, WET, WHATE, WIT.

wate (wāt). Scot. & dial. Eng. var. of WOT, know. [= WADE.

water. † WAITER.

water aloe (ăl′ō). = WATER SOLDIER.

water apple. = CUSTARD APPLE, 1 a.

water arch. A water-filled chamber or cluster of pipes forming the lintel of a furnace mouth, as of a brick-set boiler, and replacing the usual firebrick arch.

water bag. 1. A bag to hold water.
2. The reticulum, or second stomach, of a camel or animal of the camel family.
3. Her. A variety of the water bouget.

water bean. Water chinquapin.

Wa′ter Bear′er. Astron. Aquarius.

water bells. The white water lily. Dial. Eng.

water betony. An English figwort (Scrophularia aquatica).

water birch. Any of several American birches, as Betula nigra, B. occidentalis, etc.

water biscuit. A biscuit or cracker made of flour and water.

water bitternut. The water hickory.

water blackbird. The European water ouzel. Scot. & Ir.

water blast. A blast of air produced by means of a stream of water; also, the apparatus producing this. Cf. TROMPE.

water blink. = WATER SKY.

water blinks. = BLINKS.

water blister. Hort. A local injury of a plant caused by sunlight converging through a drop of water or a bubble in glass.

water blob. Any of various aquatic or marsh plants, as the marsh marigold, the white or yellow water lily, etc. Dial. Eng.

water block. A hollow box or block of iron, through which water is circulated, to protect part of a furnace wall.

water blue. Soluble blue. See DYE.

wa′ter-board′, n. A board set up to windward in a boat, to keep out water.

water boatman. A boat bug.

wa′ter-bok′, n. [D.] Water buck.

water bottom. The space between the outer and inner bottom plating in merchant ships; — sometimes so called because used to carry water ballast. R.

water bough. An adventitious shoot from a tree trunk; a sucker. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

water brake. A railroad-car brake working by water pressure.

water break, or wa′ter-break′, n. 1. A ripple in water. Rare. 2. = WATER BAR, 1.

wa′ter breath′er (brēth′ẽr). Any animal breathing by gills.

water bridge. Steam Boilers. A bridge wall forming a water space at the back of the furnace.

water budget. Water bouget.

of Central Africa. It frequents river banks and is a good swimmer. b Any of various other antelopes, esp. certain kobs and reedbucks.

water buffalo. The common Indian buffalo. See BUFFALO, 1 a; CARABAO.

water bug. a The Croton bug. b Any of numerous aquatic hemipterous insects, esp. those belonging to Belostoma, Benacus, Zaitha, and other genera of the family Belostomatidæ (see FISH KILLER). Their hind legs are long and fringed and act like oars. c Also, the boat bug, a back swimmer, a water scorpion, or any of numerous others, some of which walk about on the surface of the water or on the soft mud at the margin of the water and cannot swim.

water butt. a A large open-headed cask, set up on end, to contain water. b Arch. Any receptacle for water, as for a fountain, lavatory, or the like.

Head of Water Buck (Kobus ellipsiprymnus), ¼ water carriage. 1. Transportation or conveyance by water. 2. Means of conveyance by water, as boats. Obs. or R. 3. Conveyance or conduction of water.

water cell. A cell containing water; one of the cells or chambers in which water is stored in a camel's stomach.

water chat. a Any of numerous South American tyrant flycatchers of the genus Fluvicola and allied genera; a water cap. b A bird of the family Henicuridæ; a forktail.

Water Chat (Fluvicola climacura). (½) water chestnut. a Any plant of the genus Trapa, esp. T. natans and T. bicornis; also, their edible, nutlike, spiny-angled fruit. See TRAPA. b A Chinese sedge (Eleocharis tuberosa) or its edible tuber.

water chevrotain. A West African chevrotain (Dorcatherium aquaticus). It has a larger body and shorter legs than the kanchils and napus.

water chinquapin or chinkapin. The American lotus (Nelumbo lutea); also, its edible, nutlike seed, which has the flavor of chinquapins. See NELUMBO, LOTUS, 3 a.

water clock. An instrument or machine to measure time by the fall, or flow, of a quantity of water, as a clepsydra.

wa'ter–clos'et, n. A closet, compartment, or room, containing a hopper for defecation fitted with some device for flushing the bowl with water; also, the hopper itself, with its accessories. Sometimes, loosely, any privy.

water cock. A large gallinule (Gallicrex cinerea) of southeastern Asia and the East Indies. In the breeding season the male is black and has a fleshy red caruncle, or horn, on the top of its head.

water color or colour. Paint. 1. A pigment ground with water and some binding material, as gum or glycerin, and applied with water as a vehicle; — so called in distinction from oil color, etc. Dry water colors are prepared in the form of solid cakes, moist water colors in a semifluid or pasty state in metal tubes or pans. 2. The art or method of painting with water colors. 3. A picture or design executed in water colors.

wa'ter–col'or-ist, -col'our-ist, n. One who paints in water colors.

wa'ter–cool', v. t.; WA'TER-COOLED'; WA'TER-COOL'ING. Mach. To cool by water, as circulating water, esp. in a water jacket; as, a water-cooled gas-engine cylinder.

water cooling. The process of cooling anything, as an engine cylinder, by circulating water. Cf. AIR COOLING.

water core. Founding. A hollow core through which water circulates in a mold, used for cooling the interior of a casting more rapidly than the outside while the metal is solidifying, as in casting a cannon.

wa'ter-course' (wô'tẽr-kōrs'; 201), n. 1. A stream of water; a river or brook. Is. xliv. 4. 2. A natural channel for water; also, a canal for the conveyance of water, esp. in draining lands. 3. Law. A living stream of water usually running in a definite channel or bed and discharging into another body of water. A watercourse may be dry during unusual droughts, but the term does not apply to a stream depending for its flow merely upon surface drainage. 4. Shipbuilding. One of the holes in floor or other plates to permit water to flow through.

water crane. 1. A gooseneck apparatus to supply water from an elevated tank, as to the tender of a locomotive. 2. A hydraulic crane.

water cress, or wa'ter-cress', n. A perennial cress (Rorippa nasturtium) growing usually in clear running or spring water. The pungent leaves are used for salad and as an antiscorbutic. Also, by extension as a book name, any other species of Rorippa.

water crow. [So called in allusion to its dark plumage.] a The water ouzel. Local, Eng. & Scot. b The European coot. Local, Eng. c The American snakebird. Local, U. S.

water crowfoot. Any aquatic crowfoot or buttercup; specif.: a In England, the white-flowered Batrachium aquatile, used as food for cattle. b In the United States, Ranunculus delphinifolius, having yellow flowers.

water culture. Plant Physiol. An experimental method of growing plants in distilled water, to which nutritive salts in certain definite proportions are added.

water cure. 1. Med. Hydropathy; hydrotherapeutics. 2. A form of torture consisting in forcing large quantities of water into a person's stomach. Slang.

water curtain. 1. Mining. A section from top to bottom in a mine, which is kept soaked by means of water continually poured down from above, as a protection against fire. 2. In a theater, a sheet of water which may be formed from above, as at the proscenium arch, as a screen to prevent spread of fire from or to the stage. Cant.

water cycle. Any of various more or less experimental water craft propelled by treadles after the manner of a bicycle. — wa'ter–cy'cle, v. i.

water deer. a A small Chinese deer (Hydropotes inermis). Both sexes are destitute of antlers. The male has descending canine tusks. b The water chevrotain.

water devil. a The rapacious larva of a large water beetle (Hydrophilus piceus), and of other similar species. See WATER BEETLE, Illust. b The heligramite.

water dock. A tall coarse dock growing in wet places. The American water dock is Rumex britanica, the European is R. hydrolapathum.

water dog. 1. A dog accustomed to the water, or trained to retrieve waterfowl, as retrievers and water spaniels. 2. a Any of various large salamanders; esp., the hellbender. b The otter. 3. Any small cloud supposed to indicate rain. Dial. Eng. 4. A sailor; esp., an old sailor; an old salt. Jocose or Rhet.

water dressing. Med. The treatment of wounds or ulcers by the application of water; also, a dressing saturated with water only, for application to a wound or an ulcer.

water dropper. Elec. A collector of atmospheric electricity, consisting essentially of an insulated vessel holding water which drops from a projecting tube, used with an electrometer to indicate changes in the potential of the air. The vessel is joined by an insulated wire to the needle of the electrometer or to one of the pairs of quadrants.

water dropwort. Any of several poisonous apiaceous plant (Œnanthe crocata), having a yellow juice which stains the skin, yellow flowers, and celerylike foliage. Also, any other species of Œnanthe, as Œ. fistulosa.

water dust. Particles of water composing clouds or fog.

water elm. Any of several ulmaceous trees: a In the United States: (1) The common or American elm; also, the wing elm. (2) The planer tree. b The Japanese tree Zelkova acuminata, of graceful habit and foliage.

water equivalent. Physics. The product of the mass of a body by its specific heat, equal numerically to the mass of water which is equivalent in thermal capacity to the body in question; the weight of water which would be heated to the temperature attained in a calorimeter by the heat absorbed by the instrument.

wa'ter-er (wô'tẽr-ẽr), n. One that waters.

wa'ter-fall' (-fôl'), n. [Cf. AS. wætergefeall.] 1. A fall, or perpendicular or very steep descent, of the water of a stream; a cascade; cataract. Cf. CATARACT, 3; CASCADE, 1. 2. Colloq. a A chignon likened to a waterfall. b A neck scarf with long pendant ends, formerly worn.

water fennel. a A European apiaceous plant (Œnanthe phellandrium). b Water starwort (Callitriche palustris).

water fern. a Any fern ally of the order Salviniales. b A fern of the genus Osmunda, esp. O. regalis.

water figwort. The water betony.

water flannel. A floating mass formed in pools by the entangled filaments of a European fresh-water green alga (Cladophora crispata).

water flea. Any of numerous small aquatic Entomostraca belonging to the genera Cyclops, Daphnia, etc.; — so called because they swim with sudden leaps, or starts.

water flounder. The windowpane (Lophopsetta maculata). Local, U. S.

wa'ter-fowl' (-foul'), n. Any bird that frequents the water, or lives about rivers, lakes, etc., or on or near the sea; esp., a swimming bird; collectively, the swimming game birds as disting. from upland game birds and shore birds.

water frame. Arkwright's first power spinning machine; — so called because driven by water power.

water fringe. Any plant of the genus Limnanthemum.

water front. 1. Land, or land with buildings, fronting or abutting on a body of water. 2. A water heater set in the front of a stove.

water fungus. a A fungus of the order Saprolegniales (which see). b Any phycomycetous fungus.

water furrow. Agric. A deep furrow for conducting water from the ground and keeping the surface soil dry.

wa'ter–fur'row, v. t. To make water furrows in; to drain by water furrows.

water gall. [Cf. 2d GALL.] 1. A cavity made in the earth by a torrent of water; a washout. Obs. or R. 2. A watery look in the sky, accompanying a rainbow; a secondary or broken rainbow. Obs. or Scot. & Dial. Eng.

water gap. A pass in a mountain ridge through which a stream runs; as, the Delaware Water Gap.

water gas. A gas made by forcing steam over incandescent carbon (coke or anthracite), whereby there results a mixture of hydrogen and carbon monoxide, according to the reaction: $C + H_2O = H_2 + CO$. It is sometimes used as a fuel, but usually is carbureted with illuminating constituents prepared from oil and used as illuminating gas. The gas of carbureted burns with a pale blue or colorless flame. It is much more poisonous than coal gas. See GAS, 2 b.

water gate. 1. A gate or gateway for the passage of water; also, a gate or valve to control the flow of water; a floodgate. Cf. FLOODGATE, 1; GATE VALVE. 2. A gate permitting access to a body of water.

water gate. A natural channel for water; a watercourse, esp. one dry in summer. Scot. & Dial. Eng.

water gauge or gage. An instrument to measure or find the depth or quantity of water, or to indicate the height of its surface, esp. in a steam boiler.

Water Gauge. a Wall of Boiler; b Glass Tube of Water Gauge in which the Water stands at the Level of that (c) in the Boiler; e e Cocks.

water germander. A European mint (Teucrium scordium) found in marshy places.

water gilding. Act or process of gilding metallic surfaces by covering them with a thin coating of gold amalgam and then volatilizing the mercury by heat; — called also wash gilding. — water gilder.

water glass. 1. A clepsydra. 2. A substance consisting of silicates of sodium or potassium, or of both ("double" water glass), found in commerce as a glassy mass, a stony powder, or dissolved in water as a viscous sirupy liquid; — called also soluble glass. It is extensively used for rendering fabrics and wood incombustible, as a cleansing agent for linen, etc., and hence as an addition to laundry soap, as a fixing agent for dyes, as a vehicle in fresco painting, in making artificial stone, in the preparation of immovable surgical dressings, etc. 3. An instrument consisting of an open box or tube with a glass bottom, used for examining objects in the water, as upon the sea bottom in shallow places. 4. A water gauge for a steam boiler, etc.

wa'ter–glass' paint'ing. Water-color fresco painting on plaster soaked with solutions of ferrous silicic acid and potassium water glass. The pigments are set with a fixative, as a solution of flint, sprayed or brushed over them after they have dried.

water grass. a A tall marsh perennial grass (Paspalum dilatatum) of the southern United States and the American tropics. b Manna grass. c The grass Chloris elegans. d Dial. Eng. (1) Velvet grass. (2) The water cress. (3) One of various horsetails (Equisetum).

water gum. a In Australia, any one of several myrtaceous trees (of the genera Tristania, Eugenia, etc.) which grow near water. The principal water gum is Tristania laurina. b In the United States, the sour gum or tupelo.

water gut. A common widely distributed green alga (Ulva enteromorpha) or one of its varieties, the narrow fronds of which resemble intestines.

water hammer. Physics. 1. A vessel partly filled with water, exhausted of air, and hermetically sealed, so that when reversed or shaken the water strikes in solid mass with a sound as of a hammer. 2. The concussion or sound of concussion of moving water against the sides of a containing pipe or vessel on a sudden stoppage or flow, esp. that made by water in a steam pipe. 3. A metal hammer used when heated, as by dipping in hot water, to blister the skin, as for counterirritation.

water hemlock. a A poisonous apiaceous plant (Cicuta virosa) of Europe; also, any of several American species of Cicuta, as C. maculata. b Water dropwort. c Water fennel.

Water Hemlock (Cicuta maculata). A Fruit; B Section of Seed; C Section of Root.

water hemp. a Any species of Acnida, a genus of amaranthaceous, decumbent, glabrous herbs. b The hemp agrimony.

water hen. Any of various ralline birds, as a coot or gallinule; esp.: a The moor hen. See GALLINULE. Eng. b The American coot. U. S. c Any of certain species of the genus Tribonyx. Australia.

water hickory. A hickory (Hicoria aquatica) of the southern United States, having many narrow leaflets and rather bitter nuts; — called also bitter pecan.

water hole. A natural hole or hollow containing water; specif., one in the dry bed of an intermittent river; in Australia, also, any pool, pond, or small lake.

water horehound. Any mint of the genus Lycopus.

water hyacinth. A tropical pontederiaceous floating aquatic plant (Piaropus crassipes) having spikes of large blue flowers and roundish leaves with inflated bladderlike petioles. It has become a serious pest in several of the rivers of Florida, having escaped from cultivation.

water hyssop. A small creeping scrophulariaceous herb (Bacopa monnieri) of wide distribution. In India it is used medicinally.

water ice. 1. = ICE, n., 2. 2. Massive ice formed by the direct freezing of water, and not by the compacting of snow.

water inch. Hydraulics. The discharge from a circular sharp-edged orifice one inch in diameter, with a head of one line above the top edge, commonly estimated at fourteen pints per minute, an old unit of hydraulic measure. Called also inch of water. The so-called miner's inch is a similar unit which varies in different localities. 2. Mech. The Archimedean screw. Rare.

water snake. 1. a Any of numerous snakes of the genus Natrix (syn. Tropidonotus) which live more or less in fresh water and feed largely on aquatic animals. Some species reach a length of four feet, are savage in appearance and disposition, and can inflict a severe, but not poisonous, bite. b Any of various East Indian and Australian strictly aquatic opisthoglyphic snakes of the family Homalopsidae having valvular nostrils and often a compressed tail.
2. Scaps. — Hydrus b.

Water Snake (Natrix [illegible]).

water snowflake. An Asiatic menyanthaceous floating plant (Limnanthemum indicum) having starlike white flowers.

wa'ter-soak', v. t. To soak in water; to fill the interstices of with water.

water soldier. a A European aquatic vallisneriaceous plant (Stratiotes aloides) with bayonet-shaped leaves. b A somewhat similar floating aroid (Pistia stratiotes).

English Water Spaniel.

water spaniel. Either of two large curly-haired breeds of spaniels, naturally fond of the water. The English breed is now nearly extinct, but the Irish is used for retrieving.

water speedwell. A kind of speedwell (Veronica anagallis) found in wet places in Europe and America.

water spider. a An aquatic European spider (Argyroneta aquatica) which constructs beneath the surface of the water a bell-shaped structure of silk, open beneath and filled with air which the spider carries down in the form of small bubbles. b A water mite. c Any spider that habitually lives on or about the water, esp. the large American species (Dolomedes [illegible]) which runs rapidly on the surface of water.

Water Spider (Argyroneta aquatica). [illegible] water spike. Any species of Potamogeton; — so called in allusion to the erect, usually emersed spikes of flowers.

wa'ter-spout' (wô'tẽr-spout'), n. 1. A pipe, duct, or orifice from which water is spouted; specif., a pipe or duct for conveying water from a roof gutter to the ground or to a cistern.
2. A slender funnel-shaped or tubular cloud extending from the under side of an ordinary cumulus cloud down to a cloud of spray torn up by whirling winds from the surface of an ocean or lake. It moves along in rapid rotation, and is sometimes straight and vertical and sometimes inclined and tortuous. The spout or funnel cloud, like the cumulus cloud of which it is a part, is of fresh water.

water sprite. A sprite supposed to inhabit or haunt the water; a water nymph. Cf. KELPIE, NIXIE, NAIAD, NEREID.

water star grass. A grassy-leaved pontederiaceous plant (Heteranthera dubia) with yellow star-shaped flowers.

water strider. Any long-legged bug of the family Hydrobatidae, which moves about on the surface of fresh waters; a water skipper.

Water Strider ([illegible] conformis).

water supply. A supply of water; water collected and conveyed for use in a city, mill, or the like.

water tabby. A kind of watered tabby. See TABBY, n., 1.

water table. 1. Arch. A stringcourse or similar member when projecting so as to throw off the water; esp., in the United States, the first table above the ground, at the top of the foundation and beginning of the upper wall.
2. Hydraulic Engin. The upper limit of the portion of the ground wholly saturated with water. This may be very near the surface or many feet below it.

water telescope. 1 Optics. A telescope in which the medium between the objective and the eyepiece is water instead of air, used in certain experiments in aberration.
2. A telescope devised for looking into a body of water.

water tender. Nav. In the United States navy, a first-class petty officer in charge in a fireroom. He "tends" water to the boilers, sees that fires are properly cleaned and stoked, etc. There is also a rating of chief water tender, who is a chief petty officer.

water thrush. a Any of several North American warblers of the genus Seiurus, allied to the ovenbird and usually found in the vicinity of streams. The plumage is olivaceous above and streaked below. The small-billed water thrush is S. noveboracensis. The large-billed, or Louisiana, water thrush is S. motacilla. b The European water ouzel. c The pied wagtail. Local, Eng.

Large-billed Water Thrush (Seiurus motacilla). [illegible]

water tower. 1. A tower or standpipe serving as a reservoir to deliver water at a required head, as to a fountain.
2. Specif.: A portable fire-extinguishing apparatus having a vertical metal pipe which can be coupled up to various heights, and supplied with water under great pressure, as by several fire engines. It is used to deliver water at heights unattainable by the ordinary apparatus.

water tree. a A climbing dilleniaceous shrub (Tetracera [illegible]) of western Africa, which yields a watery sap from the freshly cut stem. b In Australia, any of several trees, esp. Hakea [illegible], from which water may be obtained by cutting the bark or roots.

water tube. 1. Any tube for passing or holding water; specif., in some steam boilers, a tube in which water circulates and steam is generated. Cf. FIRE TUBE, GALLOWAY TUBE. See BOILER, n.
2. Zoöl. One of a system of tubular excretory organs in many invertebrates, having external openings, believed to be analogous in function to the kidneys of vertebrates.

water twist. Yarn made by the water frame.

wa'ter-vas'cu-lar, a. Zoöl. Of, pertaining to, or designating, certain vessels which develop in many invertebrates and contain a nutritive fluid mixed with water. water-vascular system, Zoöl., a system of vessels in many worms and other invertebrates, containing a circulating watery fluid analogous to blood. In some cases the so-called water-vascular system is the excretory apparatus (see WATER TUBE, 2); in others it is a true vascular system and contains blood, and in others it is a system of tubes filled with the coelomic fluid. See ECHINODERMATA.

water vine. Any Asiatic or African [illegible] climbing plant of the genus [illegible]. Their stems yield a copious and refreshing watery sap.

water wave. 1. Lit., a wave of water.
2. A mode of dressing the front hair in flattened scallops.

wa'ter-way' (wô'tẽr-wā'), n. [Cf. AS. wæterweg.] 1 A way or channel for water; also, a way of water; a navigable body of water; specif., the fairway.
2. Amount of opening for the passage of water.
3. Mech. The full-open passage area in a cock or valve.
4. Shipbuilding. Heavy planking or timbering extending fore and aft the whole of a vessel's length at the junction of the deck with the sides, forming a channel to the scuppers, which are cut through it. In iron vessels a gutter takes the place of a waterway.

water weed. Any aquatic plant with inconspicuous flowers, as the pondweed, hornwort, etc.; specif., an American vallisneriaceous plant (Philotria canadensis) with elongated branching stems and small opposite or verticillate leaves. It is naturalized in parts of Europe, as England, and there often called Babington's curse.

water weevil. Zoöl. A weevil (Lissorhoptrus simplex) whose larva feeds on the roots of the rice plant when under water. The imago feeds on the rice leaves. Southern U. S.

Water Weevil. × 4

water wheel. 1 Any wheel made to rotate by direct action of water; esp., a vertical wheel on a horizontal shaft moved at a comparatively low velocity by the impact or weight of the water on floats or buckets on the rim. A turbine actuated by water is often called a water wheel. Hence, one in which the direction of the flow of the water is radial is sometimes called a radial water wheel, etc. See BREAST WHEEL; OVERSHOT WHEEL; PELTON WHEEL; TURBINE, n., 1; UNDERSHOT WHEEL.
2 The paddle wheel of a steam vessel.
3. A wheel for raising water, as a noria.

water whip. Naut. A gun-tackle purchase hooked to a yard and used in hoisting in moderate weights.

wa'ter-white', a. Colorless and transparent like water. water-white oil. See KEROSENE.

water willow. An American acanthaceous plant (Dianthera americana) with long willowlike leaves, and spikes of small purplish flowers.

water wing. Arch. & Engin. A wall forming a wing to the abutment of a bridge or pier, and extending laterally along the shore on either side as a protection from the current.

water withe. A West Indian vitaceous climbing shrub ([illegible]) yielding an abundant watery sap.

wa'ter-work' (wô'tẽr-wûrk'), n. 1 Painting in distemper, on canvas or walls; hence, a fabric so painted then.
2. Chiefly pl. A hydraulic apparatus, or a system of works or fixtures, by which a supply of water is furnished for useful or ornamental purposes, including dams, sluices, pumps, aqueducts, distributing pipes, fountains, etc.
3. A marine scene. Obs.
4. Chiefly pl. The source of tears; hence, tears. Slang.

wa'ter-wort' (wô'tẽr-wûrt'), n. [Cf. AS. wæterwyrt water fennel.] a Any plant of the family Elatinaceae. b A plant of the family Philydraceae.

wa'ter-y (-ĭ), a. [AS. wæterig.] 1. Of, pert. to, or connected with, water. "The watery god." Dryden. "Fish within their watery residence." Milton.
2. Containing or discharging water; wet; hence, tearful.
3. Resembling or suggesting water; thin or transparent, as a liquid; weak; vapid; pale; as, watery colors.
4. Hence, soft, soggy, flabby, or the like, as the flesh of some fish, inferior vegetables, etc.
5. Watering from craving. Obs. "Watery palate." Shak. watery eye, Med. — EPIPHORA, 1. — w. fusion, Chem., the melting of certain crystals by heat in their own water of crystallization. — w. sky, a sky threatening rain.

Wat'ling Street (wŏt'lĭng). 1. A Roman road extending across South Britain in a general northwesterly direction. Beginning at Richborough, or Dover, it ran through Canterbury to London, and thence to Chester.
2. The Milky Way, or Galaxy. Obs.

watt (wŏt), n. [After James Watt, Scottish inventor.] Physics. A unit of power or activity equal to 10^7 C. G. S. units of power, or to work done at the rate of one joule a second or to the rate of work represented by a current of one ampere under a pressure of one volt; a volt ampere. An English horse power is approximately equal to 746 watts. For a continuous current the value in watts is equal to the product of the voltage and amperage. For an alternating current the same product gives only the apparent watts, or apparent power; the true watts, or power, may be found by further multiplying by the cosine of the angle of lag, or directly by a wattmeter. The ratio of true to apparent watts or power is called the power factor.

watt'age (-āj), n. Elec. Amount of electric power expressed in watts.

Wat'teau' (wȧ'tō'; vȧ'tō'), a. Of or pert. to Antoine Watteau, the French painter (1684–1721), or a kind represented in Watteau's pictures; — said esp. of women's garments. Watteau back, a style of back for a woman's gown, in which one or more very broad folds are carried from the neck to the floor without being held in at the waist, while the front and sides of the gown are shaped to the person.

watt hour. The work done by one watt acting for one hour; — a unit of energy.

watt'-hour' me'ter. Elec. A device to record electric energy, usually in kilowatt hours; an integrating wattmeter; — often erroneously called wattmeter. See METER, 2.

wat'tle (wŏt''l), n. [AS. watul, watel, watol, interwoven twigs, wattle; cf. ME. watel a bag. Cf. WALLET.] 1 A twig or flexible rod; a withe; wand; hence, a framework of hurdle made of such rods.
2. pl. Rods laid on a roof to support the thatch.
3. Material consisting of wattled twigs, withes, etc., used for walls, fences, etc. Frances Hodgson Burnett.
4. a A naked, fleshy, and usually wrinkled and highly colored process of the skin hanging from the head or throat of a bird or reptile. b A barbel of a fish. c A flap of loose hanging flesh on either side of the throat of some swine. Obs. or Dial. Eng.
5. a In Australia, any tree of the genus Acacia; — so called from the fact, it is said, that the early settlers made of the long pliable branches of the spiny shrub wattle huts. b = WATTLE BARK. wattle and dab (or daub), Building, = STUD AND MUD.

Wattle (Acacia [illegible]).

wat'tle (wŏt''l), v. t.; WAT'TLED (-'ld); WAT'TLING (-lĭng). 1 To bind, fence, etc., with wattles or hurdles.
2. To twist or interweave, one with another, as twigs; to form a network with; to plat.
3. To form by interweaving or platting twigs. Milton.
4. To beat or flog with or as with a twig. Dial. Eng. & Scot.

wattle bark. The astringent bark derived from various Australian acacias, used in tanning; mimosa bark.

wat'tle-bird' (-bûrd'), n. a Any of several Australasian honey eaters of the genus Anthochaera having fleshy pendulous ear wattles. The common Australian species (A. carunculata) is mostly grayish brown with white shaft stripes in the feathers of the upper parts and a white-tipped tail. An allied species (A. [illegible]) inhabits Tasmania. Formerly called also [illegible]. b A wattle crow. c The Australian brush turkey.

Wattlebird (Anthochaera carunculata).

wattle crow. Any long-tailed dark gray corvine bird of the genus Glaucopis having a conspicuous fleshy wattle on each side of the base of the lower mandible. G. [illegible], of the South Island of New Zealand, has orange wattles; G. [illegible], of the North Island, has blue.

wat'tled (wŏt''ld), a. Furnished with wattles, or pendent fleshy processes; specif., Her., jelloped. "[illegible]." Longfellow.

wa'ter-shut', n. A sluice; a floodgate. [illegible] water silvering. Silvering done with water amalgam. wa'ter-skin', n. A vessel of skin to hold water.
water skipper. = WATER STRIDER. water slide. A flume used in logging, etc. water socks. White water lily (Castalia alba) of Europe. Obs.
water sorrel. The water dock.
water sparrow. Dial. Eng. & Scot. a Reed warbler. b Reed bunting. water spinner. = WATER SPIDER, a. water sprout. See EPICORMIC SHOOT. water stair or stairs. Stairs leading to the water, as at a boat landing. [illegible] wa'ter-stand'ing, a. [illegible] water stang. A pole or poles across a stream, serving for a bridge. Dial. Eng.
water star. The starfruit. water starwort. Any plant of the genus Callitriche.
wa'ter-stead (wô'tẽr-stĕd), n. Bed of a stream. Obs. or Dial. Eng. [illegible] wa'ter-stock', n. A stand for water. [illegible] water stoma. Bot. A water pore. wa'ter-stoup' (wô'tẽr-; wä'-; wŏ'tẽr-), n. A bucket for water. Scot.
wa'ter-struck', a. Designating brick in which water instead of sand was used to prevent sticking in the mold.
water swallow. 1. The water wagtail.
2. = SINK, n., 5. Dial. Eng.
water target. The water shield.
water thermometer. Physics. A thermometer filled with water instead of mercury, for ascertaining the precise temperature at which water is most dense. water thief. Pirate. Obs. or R. water thistle. An Old World thistle (Cnicus palustris). water thyme. The water weed. water tick. = WATER MITE. water tiger. = WATER BEETLE a. water torch. [illegible] water trefoil. The buck bean. wa'ter-tube' boil'er. See BOILER, 2. water tupelo. A species of gum (Nyssa aquatica) growing in swamps in the southern United States.
water turkey. = ANHINGA a. water tuyère. A water-jacketed tuyère.
water violet. The featherfoil. water viper. Water moccasin. water vole. The water rat, a. water witch. a Dabchick. b [illegible] wa'ter-wood' (-wŏŏd'), n. A West Indian [illegible] tree [illegible]. wa'ter-worn' (-wōrn'), a. Worn, smoothed, or polished by the action of water.
water yarrow. The featherfoil. Dial. Eng. wath (wăth), n. [Cf. Icel. vað.] Ford. Obs. or Scot. & Dial. Eng. wath, a. Dangerous. Obs.
wathe, n. [illegible] [illegible] wath'er. [illegible] wath'stead. [illegible] watkin. ✝ WATKIN.
watschoed. [illegible]
watt. [illegible]
watte. ✝ WAT.
wat'ter. [illegible] Scot. & dial. [illegible]

wattled bee eater, a wattlebird a. — w. bird of paradise, a bird of paradise (Paradigalla carunculata) having an erect yellowish wattle in front of each eye and a bluish pendent one at each angle of the mouth. — w. crow, a wattlebird b. — w. honey eater, a wattlebird a. — w. lapwing, a wattled plover. — w. plover, any of various plovers of the subfamily Lobvianellinæ, of the warmer parts of the Old World. They resemble the lapwings, but the face, esp. between the eye and the bill, has variously colored fleshy wattles. — w. starе or starling, a bird (Creadion carunculatus), native of New Zealand, allied to the huia. It has small wattles.

watt'less (wŏt'lĕs), a. Elec. Without any power (cf. WATT); — said of an alternating current or component of current when it differs in phase by ninety degrees from the electromotive force which produces it, or of an electromotive force or component thereof when the current which it produces differs from it in phase by ninety degrees. Cf. ENERGY COMPONENT. — wattless component, the component of an alternating current or electromotive force, producing no power; — disting. from energy component. — w. volt amperes, the product of the wattless component of current by voltage, or wattless component of voltage by current. — w. watts, wattless volt amperes; — a misnomer.

wat'tling (wŏt'lĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of WATTLE. Hence: n. Act or process of binding with or interweaving twigs; also, the network so formed.

watt'me'ter (wŏt'mē'tĕr), n. [watt + -meter.] Elec. a An instrument for measuring electric power in watts. b A watt-hour meter; — a common misnomer.

wave (wāv), v. i.; WAVED (wāvd); WAV'ING (wāv'ĭng). [ME. waven, AS. wafian to wave (prob. the same word as wafian to look with wonder, to be amazed); akin to wæfre wavering, restless, MHG. wabern to be in motion, Icel. vafra to hover about; cf. Icel. váfa to vibrate. Cf. WAFT, WAVER.] 1. To play loosely; to move like a wave, one way and the other; to float; flutter; undulate.

His purple robes waved careless to the winds. Trumbull.

2. To be moved to and fro as a signal; to signal in this way.

3. To waver; vacillate. Obs.

4. To be sinuous like a wave; to curve alternately in and out or up and down.

wave, v. t. 1. To move one way and the other; to swing, sway, brandish, or the like; as, to wave a sword.

2. To cause to have sinuosities; to raise into ridges and furrows; to give an undulating form or surface to.

3. To carry by waves or wavelike movements; to waft. Obs.

4. To call attention to, or give a direction or command to, by a waving motion, as of the hand; to beckon; signal.

Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground. Shak.

5. To water, as silk.

to wave the bloody shirt, to incite to revenge; — used esp. of an effort, as in a speech, to stir up again for political purposes the issues and sectional animosities of the Civil War period in the United States; hence, to attempt to inflame sectional or racial animosity. The expression is said to allude to a Corsican vendetta custom of waving a murdered man's bloody shirt as an incitement to revenge.

wave, n. [From WAVE, v.; or due to confusion of wave, v. i., with ME. wawe, waghe, a wave, which is prob. akin to E. wag to move. See WAVE, v. i.] 1. A ridge or swell on the surface of a liquid, as of the sea, having normally a forward motion distinct from the oscillatory motion of the particles which successively compose it; an undulation. Minute waves, or ripples, are largely dependent on surface tension, those of larger size on the force of gravity. The chief cause of waves in lakes or seas is the friction between wind and water. Waves once formed are propagated for long distances, but on reaching shallows, being retarded below, curl over and form breakers.

2. Physics. A vibrational disturbance propagated from particle to particle through a body or elastic medium, as in the transmission of sound, light, etc.; an assemblage of vibrating particles in all phases of a vibration, with no phase repeated; an undulation. Cf. LIGHT, 1 c; 7th SOUND, 2; VIBRATION, 2.

3. Water; a body of water. Poetic. "Deep drank Lord Marmion of the wave." Scott.

4. A salient curved unevenness, or one of a series of such, in a surface; an undulation; ridge; swell. Sir I. Newton.

5. A waving or undulating motion; a signal made by waving the hand, a flag, etc.

6. The undulating line or streak of luster on cloth watered, or calendered, or on damask steel.

7. Math. Any of a number of similar sections into which a summation may be divided.

8. Something resembling or likened to a water wave, as in rising unusually high, in being of unusual extent, or in progressive motion; a swelling or excitement, as of feeling or energy; a tide; flood; a period of intensity, unusual activity, or the like; as, a wave of enthusiasm.

Syn. — WAVE, BILLOW, BREAKER. WAVE is the general word; a BILLOW (often elevated or poetical for wave) is esp. a great surge or swell; a BREAKER is a heavy wave which breaks into foam, esp. against rocks or over reefs or shoals.

wave of contraction, Physiol., the visible onward contraction of a muscle from the point where the stimulus is applied.

waved (wāvd), a. Exhibiting a wavelike form or outline; specif.: a Undulating; indented; wavy; as, a waved edge. b Having a wavelike appearance; marked with wavelike lines of color; as, waved, or watered, silk.

waved wheel. = WAVE WHEEL.

wave front. Physics. a A surface composed at any instant of all the points just reached by a vibrational disturbance in its propagation through a medium. b A surface so drawn as to pass through those parts of a wave where the distortion, or the displacement, of the medium through which the wave passes is everywhere the same.

wa'vel-lite (wā'vĕl-it), n. [After Dr. Wm. Wavel, the discoverer.] Min. A basic phosphate of aluminium, usually in hemispherical radiated aggregates varying from white to yellow, green, or black. H., 3.25–4. Sp. gr., 2.32–2.34.

wave molding or moulding. Arch. a A molding with a pattern suggesting a row of breaking waves, seen in profile. Cf. VITRUVIAN SCROLL. b A molding with a wavelike profile.

wave motion. Vibrational motion characterized by waves.

wa'ver (wā'vẽr), v. i.; WA'VERED (-vẽrd); WA'VER-ING. [ME. waveren; cf. AS. wæfre wavering, restless. See WAVE, v. i.] 1. To play or move to and fro; to sway one way and the other; to wave; hence, to totter; reel; also, to quiver or flicker like a ray of light.

Banners and pennons wavering with the wind. Ld. Berners.

2. To be unsettled in opinion; to vacillate; to be undetermined; to fluctuate; as, to waver in judgment.

Let us hold fast . . . without wavering. Heb. x. 23.

3. To wander. Obs. Scot. Barbour.

Syn. — Reel, totter, vacillate. See FLUCTUATE.

wa'ver, v. t. Obs. 1. To make to move to and fro or one way and the other; to wave.

2. To be undetermined or irresolute about; to hesitate at.

wa'ver, n. An act of wavering, quivering, or the like.

wav'er (wā'vẽr), n. One that waves; specif., in large printing presses, a roller that finally smooths and distributes the ink on the inking tables.

wave shell. Physics. An imaginary shell or layer, in any medium traversed by a wave, such that the vibrating motion of the particles constituting the layer is everywhere in the same phase. The wave shell is bounded by the wave front; and in isotropic media it is spherical and everywhere normal to the wave path.

wave surface. Physics. A wave front; also, a combination of wave fronts developed simultaneously from a single center, as in uniaxial and biaxial crystals. Thus, the wave surface for a uniaxial doubly refracting substance consists of a sphere inclosing, or inclosed by, an ellipsoid of revolution. The form of the wave surface formed by light from a point within a uniaxial or biaxial crystal has been described by Fresnel for many typical cases. See also HUYGENS'S WAVE SURFACE.

2. Geom. The envelope of a system of simultaneous plane wave fronts, or the locus of all points simultaneously reached by an undulatory agitation set up at any center. In general it is of fourth degree and enwraps the center twice.

wav'y (wā'vĭ), a. 1. Rising or swelling in waves; abounding in waves. "The wavy seas." Chapman.

2. Playing or moving to and fro with an undulating motion; as, wavy flames. "Wavy corn." Prior.

3. a Bot. Undulate. b Her. Waved. = UNDÉ.

wavy hair grass, a wiry perennial grass (Deschampsia flexuosa) of temperate regions.

wax (wăks), v. i.; pret. WAXED (wăkst); p. p. WAXED, Obs. or Poetic WAX'EN (wăk's'n); p. pr. & vb. n. WAX'ING. [AS. weaxan; akin to OFries. waza, D. wassen, OS. & OHG. wahsan, G. wachsen, Icel. vaxa, Sw. växa, Dan. voxe, Goth. wahsjan, Gr. ἀύξανειν to increase, Skr. vaksh, uksh, to grow. Cf. WAIST.] 1. To increase in size; to grow; to become larger or fuller; — opposed to wane.

Truth's treasures . . . never shall wax ne wane. Piers Plowman.

2. Obs. a To spring; to arise. b To grow up.

3. To pass from one state to another; to become; grow; as, to wax strong; to wax old; to wax well. Milton.

wax, n. [AS. weax; akin to OFries. wax, D. vas, G. wachs, OHG. wahs, Icel. & Sw. vax, Dan. vox, Lith. waszkas, Russ. vosk.] 1. A substance secreted by bees by special glands on the under side of the abdomen, and used by them, after mastication and mixture with the secretion of the salivary glands, for constructing the honeycomb; — called specif. beeswax. It is a dull yellow solid of agreeable odor, plastic when warm, and melting at 62–64° C. (142–148° F.). Sp. gr., 0.964–0.970 at 15° C. On purification and bleaching it becomes white, odorless, tasteless, and comparatively brittle. It is a mixture chiefly of cerotic acid and myricyl palmitate, insoluble in water, partially soluble in boiling alcohol, ether, etc., and miscible in all proportions with oils and fats. It is used variously in the arts, as in candles, in modeling, and in cerates, ointments, etc.

2. Hence, any of various substances resembling beeswax. Specif.: a Org. Chem. Any of a class of natural substances composed of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, and consisting chiefly of esters other than those of glycerin, or of free fatty acids, or both. In this class are included, besides beeswax, spermaceti, Chinese wax, carnauba wax, etc., and sometimes certain oily liquids, as sperm oils. Hence, any wax-forming ester, as cetyl palmitate. b Physiol. Cerumen, or earwax. See CERUMEN. c Bot. Any waxlike product secreted by plants. See VEGETABLE WAX. d Zoöl. A substance similar to beeswax, secreted by several species of scale insects, as the Chinese wax. See WAX INSECT. e A pliable composition for uniting surfaces, for excluding air, or for some other purpose; as, sealing wax, grafting wax, etching wax, etc. f A resinous composition used by shoemakers for rubbing their thread. g Ozocerite; — called specif. mineral wax; also, solid paraffin. These substances differ chemically from the true waxes in containing no oxygen. h Thick sirup or a taffylike confection made by boiling down maple sirup and then cooling it. Local, U. S. i Chewing gum. Local, U. S.

3. Mining. Plastic clay used for dams, etc.

LAUGHING PHILOSOPHER. — w. pipe, a pipe from which water falls in drips, as to supply a water seal in a trap. — w. Polly grass. See GRASS, Table II. — w. rock, a porous rock from which water percolates or oozes. — w. sinew, a ganglion. See GANGLION, n., 2. Colloq. — w. spring, a spring that discharges water slowly. — w. spruce, a tall spruce of California and Oregon (Picea breweriana), with slender pendulous branches. Its wood is soft, but heavy and close-grained. — w. tree. a Any tree having pendulous branches. b A tree from which honeydew or other liquid secretions of insects drip in considerable quantities, esp. one infested by the larvæ of any species of the genus Ptyelus, allied to the cuckoo spits, which in tropical countries secrete large quantities of a watery fluid. — w. willow, an Asiatic willow (Salix babylonica) familiar in cultivation, from which it often escapes. Its branches droop perceptibly.

weet (wēt), n. [Imitative.] a The call of any of several birds, as of the wryneck or of the European sandpiper. b The bird itself.

weet'–weet' (wēt'wēt'), n. [Native name in Victoria.] A throwing toy, or implement, of the Australian aborigines, consisting of a cigar-shaped stick fastened at one end to a flexible twig. It weighs in all about two ounces, and is about two feet long.

wee'ver (wē'vẽr), n. [Prob. fr. OF. wivre, F. vive. See WIVERN.] Any of several edible marine fishes of the genus Trachinus, or family Trachinidæ. They have a broad spinose head, with the eyes looking upward. The long dorsal fin is supported by many strong sharp spines which cause painful wounds. The British species are : the great, or greater, weever (Trachinus draco), which becomes a foot long ; and the lesser weever (T. vipera), about half as large.

wee'vil (wē'v'l), n. [ME. wivel, wevil, AS. wifel, wibil ; akin to OD. wevel, OHG. wibil, G. wiebel, wibel, and prob. to Lith. vabalas beetle, and E. weave. See WEAVE.] a Any of numerous snout beetles of the division Rhynchophora, in which the head is elongated, and usually curved downward, to form a kind of snout bearing the jaws at the tip.

Weevils a Ampeloglypter sesostris, × 7 ; b Otiorhynchus sulcatus, × 2 ; c Balaninus rectus (½), d Eupsalis minuta, × 1½. c and d infest the oak.

The antennæ are usually geniculate and the covering of the body is rough and hard. Although most species are of small size, many are very injurious. The larvæ of some live in nuts, fruit, and grain by eating out the interior, as the plum weevil, or curculio, the nut weevils, and the grain weevil. The larvæ of others bore under the bark and into the pith of trees and other plants, as the pine weevils, palm weevils, and strawberry crown borer. See also FLOUR BEETLE, PEA WEEVIL, RICE WEEVIL, SEED WEEVIL, etc. b Any of several other insects which damage stored grain, as the grain moth, wheat midge, and drug-store beetle.

wee'vil-y, wee'vil-ly (wē'v'l-ĭ), a. Weeviled.

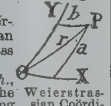
weft (wĕft), n. [AS. weft, wefta, fr. wefan to weave. See WEAVE.] 1. In weaving, the threads that cross the warp ; the thread carried by the shuttle ; woof ; shoot ; filling.

2. A web ; a thing woven.

Wei'er-stras'si-an (vī'ẽr-strä'z'ĭ-ăn ; vī'ẽr-shträs'ĭ-ăn), a. Pertaining to the German mathematician Karl Theodor Weierstrass (1815–97) or his work.

Weierstrassian coördinates (in the plane), Math., coördinates proposed by Weierstrass for the study of the non-Euclidean plane, passing over into Cartesians for $k=\infty$. In the figure, OX and OY are lines at right angles, a and b perpendiculars from P on OX and OY, OP is r ; then the Weierstrassian coördinates are $p=\cos\frac{r}{k}$, $x=k\sin\frac{a}{k}$, $y=k\sin\frac{b}{k}$, connected by the relation $k^2p^2+x^2+y^2=k^2$, where k is the space constant. These coördinates are extended to n-dimensional space. — W. curve, Weierstrass's curve. — W. function, Math., a continuous but not differentiable function, as that depicted by Weierstrass's curve ; any of several functions devised by Weierstrass.



Weierstrassian Coördinates

Wei'er-strass's curve (vī'ẽr-shträs-ĭz). Meth. A certain curve devised by K. Weierstrass. It is used to prove and illustrate Riemann's proposition that a function may be everywhere continuous and nowhere differentiable in a given interval.

It is defined by the equation $y=\sum_{n=0}^{n=\infty} b^n\cos(a^n x\pi)$, where a is an odd integer, b a positive <1, and $ab>1+\frac{3\pi}{2}$. It is infinitely zigzag, like a sinusoidal saw with infinitely fine teeth, and the arc is not finite between any two points no matter how near together.

Wei-ge'la (wī-gē'lȧ ; wī'gĕl-ȧ), n. [NL., after C. E. Weigel (1748–1831), Swedish physician.] a Bot. A genus of caprifoliaceous shrubs ; — now commonly merged in Diervilla. b [l. c.] Hort. Any Asiatic species of Diervilla, esp. D. florida. See BUSH HONEYSUCKLE, DIERVILLA. weigh (wā), v. t. ; WEIGHED (wād) ; WEIGH'ING. [ME. weien, weyen, weghen, to weigh, bear, set free, AS. wegan to bear, move, to weigh ; akin to D. wegen to weigh, G. wägen, wiegen, to weigh, bewegen to move, OHG wegan, Icel. vega to move, carry, lift, weigh, Sw. väga to weigh, Dan. veie, Goth. gawigan to shake, L. vehere to carry, Skr. vah. See WAY ; cf. WEY.] 1. To bear up ; raise ; lift. Obs. or R., exc. in to weigh anchor. "Weigh the vessel up." Cowper.

2. To examine by the balance ; to ascertain the weight of.

Weighed in the balances, and . . . found wanting. Dan. v 27.

3. To examine or test as if by the balance ; to ponder in the mind ; to consider or examine for the purpose of forming an opinion or coming to a conclusion ; to balance.

We cannot weigh our brother with ourself. Shak.
Without sufficiently weighing his expressions. Scott.

4. To consider as worthy of notice ; to regard ; esteem. Obs. or Archaic. "I weigh not you." Shak.

All that she so dear did weigh. Spenser

5. To burden ; depress ; to weigh down. Rare.

to weigh down. a To overbalance. b To oppress with weight; to depress. "To weigh thy spirits down." Milton.

weigh, v. i. 1. To weigh anchor.

2. To have weight ; to be heavy ; to have a certain weight; as, he weighs 200 pounds.

3. To be considered as important ; to have weight in the intellectual balance ; to carry weight.

Your vows to her and me . . . will even weigh. Shak.

4. To bear heavily ; to press hard.

Cleanse the stuffed bosom of that perilous stuff Which weighs upon the heart. Shak.

5. To judge ; estimate ; consider.

Could not weigh of worthiness aright. Spenser.

to weigh down, to sink by its own weight. — to w. in or out, to be weighed at the end or beginning respectively of a contest, as a test of qualification, as a jockey in a race.

weigh'age (wā'ĕj), n. Eng. Law. A duty or toll paid for weighing merchandise.

weigh'bridge' (wā'brĭj'), n. A platform scale, flush with the roadway, for weighing vehicles, cattle, etc.

weigh'er (wā'ẽr), n. One that weighs ; specif., an officer whose duty it is to weigh commodities or test weights. — weigh'er-ship, n.

weigh'–house', n. A building at or within which goods, and the like, are weighed.

weigh'lock' (wā'lŏk'), n. A lock, as on a canal, in which boats are weighed and their tonnage is settled.

weigh'mas'ter (-mäs'tẽr ; cf. -MASTER), n. One whose business it is to weigh ore, hay, merchandise, etc. ; one licensed as a public weigher.

weight (wāt), n. [ME. weght, wight, AS. wiht, gewiht ; akin to D. gewigt, G. gewicht, Icel. vætt, Sw. vigt, Dan. vægt. The vowel is due to influence of the v. See WEIGH, v. t.] 1. The quality of being heavy ; that property of bodies by which they tend toward the center of the earth ; the effect of gravitative force, esp. when expressed in certain units or standards, as pounds, grams, etc. Weight constitutes a measure of the force of gravity, and, being the resultant of all the forces exerted by gravity upon the different particles of the body, it is proportional to the mass of the body.

2. The quantity of heaviness ; comparative tendency to the center of the earth ; the quantity of matter as estimated by the balance, or expressed numerically with reference to some standard unit ; as, a mass of stone having the weight of 500 pounds.

3. Hence, pressure ; burden ; as, the weight of care or business. "The weight of this sad time." Shak.

4. Importance ; consequence ; moment ; power ; influence ; as, a consideration which is of vast weight ; men of weight.

In such a point of weight, so near mine honor. Shak.

5. A mode of estimating weight or mass ; a system of simply related units used for this purpose; as, avoirdupois weight ; troy weight ; apothecaries' weight.

6. A ponderous mass ; something heavy ; as, a clock weight ; a paper weight ; a shuffleboard weight.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands. Bacon.

7. A definite mass of iron, brass, platinum, or other material, to be used for ascertaining the weight of other bodies ; as, an ounce weight.

8. A unit of weight or mass ; as, a table of weights.

9. Mining. A pennyweight ; — chiefly in pl. Australia.

10. Alg. The degree which an algebraic expression would have if to each of the symbols entering into it were assigned a degree fixed by any rule ; esp., the degree which a function of the coefficients of a quantic would have if each of these coefficients were regarded as having a degree equal to the exponent of a selected variable (say x) in the term of the quantic in which that coefficient appears.

Law. The customary weekly service of labor due from a villein or unfree tenant to his lord, usually 2 or 3 days during the greater part of the year and 4 or 5 in summer. [WEAL.]

weel Scot. & dial. Eng. var. of weal (wēl). Obs. or Scot. & dial. Eng. var. of WELL, adv. & a.

‖ Foreign Word. † Obsolete Variant of. + combined with. = equals.

2. A fence of stakes, brushwood, or the like, set in a stream, tideway, or inlet of the sea, for taking fish.
3. A long notch with a horizontal edge, as in the top of a vertical plate or plank, through which water flows, used in measuring the quantity of flowing water.

weird (wērd), n. [ME. wirde, werde, AS. wyrd fate, fortune, fr. weorðan to be, to become; akin to OS. wurd fate, OHG. wurt, Icel. urðr. See WORTH to become.] 1. Fate; destiny; lot; fortune. Obs. or Archaic or Scot.
2. [cap.] Obs. or Scot. a Fate personified. b pl. The Fates, or Norns.
3. Obs. or Scot. a A prophecy; prediction. b A spell; charm. c A soothsayer. d A fateful tale.
4. An occurrence; something which actually takes place; — chiefly in the proverb, after word comes weird. Scot.

weird, a. 1. Of, pert. to, or dealing with, fate or the Fates, or destiny. "Weird women we!" Scott.
2. Of or pertaining to witchcraft; caused by, or suggesting, magical influence; hence, unearthly; uncanny; wild; as, a weird appearance, look, sound, etc.

Low tones, that seemed like a weird incantation. Longfellow.

Syn. — WEIRD, EERIE, UNCANNY. WEIRD is used of that which is strange, wild, or unearthly; EERIE suggests esp. an undefined dread, uneasiness, or "creepiness"; that is UNCANNY, as here compared, which is vaguely or unpleasantly mysterious; all three words, but esp. weird, have become of late somewhat hackneyed: — "'Weird' is 'played out long ago,' as Mr. Swinburne says; it is smeared over the coarse palette of the descriptive reporter" (Sat. Rev.; cited by A. S. Hill).

The ordinary reader . . . becomes chilled and daunted in the eerie regions to which Poe carries him. . . . Now, the effective vindication of Poe . . . is that, weird and bizarre and abnormal as are the themes he affected, he is essentially a realist in his method. . . . "The Telltale Heart" and . . . "The Cask of Amontillado" have had a psychological basis in the perversities of a disturbed imagination; hence the uncanny fascination of these and other stories of his in a similar taste. J. M. Robertson.

Weird Sisters. a The Fates. Scot. b Three witches in Shakespeare's "Macbeth." Cf. NORN.

-The Weird Sisters, hand in hand, Posters of the sea and land. Shak.

weird, v. t. Obs. or Scot. a To assign to a certain fate; to destine. b To foretell or assign as a fate; to predict. c To warn (of something foreseen).

Weis'mann-ism (vīs'män-īz'm), n. Biol. The theories and teachings as to heredity propounded by the German biologist August Weismann, esp. in regard to germ plasm as the basis of heredity and the impossibility of transmitting acquired characteristics; — often called Neo-Darwinism.

weiss beer (vīs). [G. weissbier white beer.] A light-colored highly effervescent beer made by the top-fermentation process. See BREWING, 1.

Weit'spek-an (wit'spĕk-ăn), a. Designating, or pertaining to, a linguistic stock of North American Indians comprising a group of tribes on the lower Klamath River, northwestern California. They are industrious and enterprising laborers, skilled in basketry, and formerly were noted canoe builders.

we'jack (wē'jăk), n. [From Amer. Indian; cf. Ojibwa otchig, Cree otchek, Montagnais utshek, on Hudson Bay woodshock, wejack. Cf. WOODCHUCK.] The fisher, or pekan.

we'ka (wā'kä; wĕ'kä), n. [Maori.] Any of several flightless New Zealand rails of the genus Ocydromus. The short wings each have a spur used in fighting. The birds are mischievous and thievish. Called also wood hen.

Weka (Ocydromus australis). ¼ wel'come (wĕl'kŭm), a. [ME. welcome, welcume, wilcume, AS. wilcuma a welcome guest, fr. wil-, as a prefix (akin to willa will, and wel well) + cuma a comer, fr. cuman to come; hence, properly, one who comes so as to please another's will; prob. influenced by ME. wel well; cf. Icel. velkominn welcome, G. willkommen, D. welkom. See WILL, n.; COME.] 1. Received gladly into one's presence or companionship; admitted willingly to the house, entertainment, or company; as, a welcome visitor; — used elliptically, in salutation, for you are welcome.

When the glad soul is made Heaven's welcome guest. Cowper.

2. Giving pleasure; grateful; pleasing; as, welcome news. "O, welcome hour!" Milton.
3. Free or willingly permitted, as to do, to have, or enjoy anything; as, you are welcome to the use of my library; you are welcome to enter; — sometimes implying scornful indifference; as, you are welcome to your opinion.

wel'come, n. Act of welcoming or of saluting or treating as welcome; a cordial or kindly greeting to, or reception of, a guest or newcomer; as, we found a ready welcome.

wel'come, v. t.; WEL'COMED (-kŭmd); WEL'COM-ING (-kŭm-ĭng). [AS. wilcumian.] To greet (a visitor, or the like) with cordiality or courtesy; to receive and entertain hospitably and gladly; to make welcome; as, to welcome a visitor. "I welcome you to land." Addison.

weld (wĕld), n. Also woald, wold, and would. [ME. welde; akin to Scot. wald, G. wau, formerly waude, Dan. & Sw. vau, D. wouw.] 1. The dyer's weed.
2. A yellow coloring matter extracted from this plant. It is used as a dye for silk, and to a limited extent for wool.

weld, v. t.; WELD'ED; WELD'ING. [Prob. orig. the same word as well to spring up, to gush; perh. fr. the Scand.; cf. Sw. välla to weld, uppvälla to boil up, to spring up, Dan. vælde to gush, G. wellen to weld. See WELL to spring.] 1. To press or beat, as the ends of two iron bars, into intimate and permanent union, usually while softened by heat; also, to unite or form by a fusing heat, as bars or a joint in electric welding. Welding in the common way is extensively practiced with iron, and to a less extent with platinum, horn, and tortoise shell. Electric welding, in which the parts to be joined are heated to fusion by an electric arc (arc welding) or by passage of a large current through the junction, is used in uniting steel rails, making steel tubing, etc. See THERMITE; cf. 1st BRAZE, 1; SOLDER, 1.
2. To unite closely or intimately; to join closely; as, to weld the links in a chain of logic.

Two women faster welded in one love. Tennyson.

weld, v. i. To be, or be capable of being, welded.
weld, n. State of being welded; also, a welded joint.
weld'er (wĕl'dĕr), n. One that welds; specif., a step-down transformer specially constructed for electric welding.
Wel'don proc'ess (wĕl'dŭn). [After the inventor, Walter Weldon (1832-85), English chemist.] A process for the recovery or regeneration of manganese dioxide in making chlorine, by means of milk of lime and the oxygen of the air. The regenerated product, which is called Weldon mud, is a slime containing manganites of calcium and manganese, and yields chlorine when treated with hydrochloric acid.
wel'fare' (wĕl'fâr'), n. [well + fare to go. Cf. FARE-WELL.] 1. State of faring, or doing, well; state or condition in regard to well-being; esp., condition of health, happiness, prosperity, or the like; negatively, exemption from evil or calamity; as, the welfare of troops in the field; to care for the moral welfare of a child.

How to study for the people's welfare. Shak.
In whose deep eyes
Men read the welfare of the times to come. Emerson.

2. Good cheer; material plenty; also, a good thing. Obs.
We'lin breech mechanism (wā'lĭn). A modification of the interrupted-screw system having the threaded sectors arranged in steps at different distances from the center of rotation, so that the threaded area can be made to cover a larger proportion of the surface of the block.

wer (wûr; wĕr), n. [AS. wer; akin to OS. & OHG. wer, Goth. wair, L. vir, Skr. vira. Cf. WERGILD, WEREWOLF.] 1. A man; a husband; a warrior; a vassal. Obs. 2. A man's wergild. Obs. or Hist.

were (wûr; also, esp. in British usage, wĕr; 277). [AS. wǣre (thou) wast, wǣron (we, you, they) were, wǣre imp. subj. See WAS.] A verb form supplying the preterit indicative plural, and preterit subjunctive singular and plural, of the verb be. See BE.

were'wolf' (wĕr'wo͝olf'; wĕr'-), n.; pl. -WOLVES (-wo͝olvz'). [AS. werewulf for werwulf; were, late AS. form for wer man + wulf a wolf; cf. G. wärwolf, währwolf, wehrwolf, a werewolf, MHG. werwolf. See WER a man, WOLF; cf. VIRILE, VIRTUE, WORLD.] Folklore. A person transformed into a wolf in form and usually in appetite, temporarily or permanently, or a person capable of assuming a wolf's form; a lycanthrope. Belief in werewolves is ancient and widespread, appearing in the literature of many races. The original transformation is often imposed as a diabolical bewitchment. In other cases the wolf's form is assumed voluntarily, as to gratify a craving for human flesh. One who was a werewolf by choice could in general resume human form at will.

wer'gild' (wûr'gĭld'; wĕr'-), were'gild' (wĕr'gĭld'; wĕr'-), n. [AS. wergild; wer a man, value set on a man's life + gild, gield, payment of money; akin to G. wehrgeld. See WER a man; GELD, n.] Law. Among the Anglo-Saxons and other Teutonic races, the value set upon a man's life; the fixed price which must be paid by the kindred of a manslayer to the kindred of the slain person by way of composition to avoid the blood feud. In early times for a freeman it was 1,200 Saxon shillings, or £24; for a villein, 200 shillings, or £4; for a serf or slave, 40 pence. A fixed scale of values was established, varying from that of the churl to that of the king. The liability for the wergild fell upon the kindred in the same proportion as they received it, the larger part upon the paternal kindred. Acceptance of the wergild by the kindred, originally optional, later became compulsory, and finally it could not be demanded nor the blood feud waged, the slayer being left to public justice. Similar methods of composition have existed among many primitive peoples. Cf. BOTE, 3; WITE, 1; ERIC; CRO.

Wer-ne'ri-an (wĕr-nē'rĭ-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to A. G. Werner (1750–1817), a German mineralogist and geologist, who classified minerals according to their external characters, and advocated the theory that the strata of the earth's crust were formed by depositions from water; designating, or according to, Werner's system or theory; Neptunian.—n. A supporter of Werner's theory; a Neptunist.

wharve (hwôrv), warve (wôrv), n. [AS. Wharrow Spindle (Her.). hweorfa. See WHORL.] Spinning. Orig., the small fly or flywheel on the lower end of a spindle used for momentum in hand spinning; in modern spinning machinery, the small grooved pulley on a spindle, by which the spindle is driven; — called also whirl, whorl, etc.

what (hwŏt), pron. & a. [AS. hwæt, neuter of hwā who; akin to OS. hwat what, OFries. hwet, D. & LG. wat, G. was, OHG. waz, hwaz, Icel. hvat, Sw. & Dan. hvad, Goth. hwa. See WHO.] A pronominal word used both substantively and adjectively, as singular or plural. It is: 1. An interrogative, referring to the nature or identity of an object or matter in question, and used only adjectively of persons; as, what is this? what did you say? what child is lost? "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!" (Matt. viii. 27). In certain cases, however, what is used substantively of a person, where the reference is esp. to his character, occupation, or position rather than to his identity. "What is that Barnardine?" Shak.

What is man, that thou art mindful of him? Ps. viii. 4.

☞ Originally, what, when, where, which, who, why, etc., were interrogatives only, and it is often difficult to determine whether they are used as interrogatives or relatives.

2. An exclamatory word, used: a Absolutely, often with the force of an uncompleted question, as, what! for "what do you mean?" etc., and frequently introducing a question. Formerly often expressing a summons, or as a mere expletive, like well! "What, Jessica!" Shak. "What! welcome be thou." Chaucer.

What, could ye not watch with me one hour? Matt. xxvi. 40.

b Adjectively, meaning how remarkable, or how great; as, what folly! what eloquence! what courage!

What a piece of work is a man! Shak.

What in this use has a or an between itself and its noun if the qualitative or quantitative importance of the object is emphasized. c Sometimes adverbially prefixed to adjectives, as nearly equivalent to how; as, what happy boys!

What partial judges are our love and hate! Dryden.

3. A compound relative, equivalent to which with an antecedent demonstrative. It is used of both persons and things: a Substantively, for that which, or those [persons] who, or those [things] which.

With joy beyond what victory bestows. Cowper.

I'm thinking Captain Lawton will count the noses of what are left before they see their whaleboats. Cooper.

I know well . . . how little you will be disposed to criticize what comes to you from me. J. H. Newman.

But what has the force of who, or that, . . . not; as, "He never had any money but what he absolutely needed," i. e., that he did not need. b Adjectively, for the . . . which or who; the sort or kind of . . . which; such . . . as.

See what natures accompany what colors. Bacon.

To restrain what power either the Devil or any earthly enemy hath to work us woe. Milton.

We know what master laid thy keel,

What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel. Longfellow.

Rarely also for, the . . . on, or at, which; at the . . . when, as in the poetic "what time."

What time the mighty moon was gathering light. Tennyson.

What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee. Ps. lvi. 3.

4. An indefinite relative: Whatever; whatsoever; what thing soever. "What after so befall." Chaucer.

Whether it were the shortness of his foresight, the strength of his will, . . . or what it was. Bacon.

5. A simple relative: that; which. Obs. or Dial.

That what is extremely proper in one company may be highly improper in another. Chesterfield.

6. An indefinite pronoun: a Something; anything; — now only in such phrases as I tell you what, where what anticipates the following statement, being elliptical for what I think, what it is, how it is, etc.

what all, what it all might be; as, a jumble of chairs, dishes, and I don't know what all. Colloq. — what an if, what if, Obs. — what dones, lit., of what make, by analogy with what kinnes: of what kind. Obs. — w. for, an indirect locution meaning a whipping; punishment; as, I 'll give him what for. Dial. or Colloq., Eng. — w. for a [cf. G. was für ein?], what sort of; — in questions; as, what is he for a fighter? Obs. or Dial. — w. for no? why not? Scot. — w. ho! an exclamation of calling. — w. if, what will it matter if; what will or would happen or be the result if. "What if it be poison?" Shak. — w. is thee? what is the trouble with thee? Obs. — w. not (with the force of, "what might I not mention, say, do," or the like) is often used elliptically at the close of an enumeration of several particulars or articles, implying others such as the context indicates or which are not considered worth specifying. "Men hunt, hawk, and what not." Becon. "Some dead puppy, or log, or what not." C. Kingsley. "Battles, tournaments, hunts, and what not." De Quincey. It is often used with the force of a substantive, equivalent to anything you please, a miscellany, etc. — w. of? what do you say or think of? as, watchman, what of the night? — w. of this? what? it? etc., what follows from this, that, it, etc., often with the force of what matters, implying that it is of no consequence. "All this is so; but what of this, my lord?" Shak. "The night is spent, why, what of that?" Shak. — w. that, whatever. Obs. — w. though, even allowing that; supposing it true that; what matter that. "What though the rose have prickles, yet 't is plucked." Shak. — w. 's what, an indirect locution meaning, a correct idea of things; which is which; as, that will teach him what 's what.

2. How? in what respect? as, what does it benefit him? Formerly also with exclamatory and intensive force: how great; to what degree.

3. In part; partly; somewhat; — followed by a preposition, esp. with, and often repeated with distributive force.

What for lust [pleasure] and what for lore. Chaucer.

Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty, I am custom shrunk. Shak.

what, conj. 1. As much as; so far as; as, he helped them what he could. Now Rare.

2. That; — in but what, but that; that . . . not.

Her needle is not so absolutely perfect in tent and cross stitch but what my superintendence is advisable. Scott.

Never fear but what our kite shall fly as high. Ld. Lytton.

wha'ta (hwä'tä), n. [Maori.] A storehouse, usually thatch-roofed, built on posts capped with inverted cones to prevent rats from getting in; — called also futtah. New Zealand.

what-ev'er (hwŏt-ĕv'ẽr), pron. An indefinite relative: All that; no matter what. It is used: 1. Substantively: Anything soever which.

Whatever Earth, all-bearing mother, yields. Milton.

Whatever be its intrinsic value. J. H. Newman.

2. Adjectively: Of any kind soever that it may be; — often following its noun; as, no food whatever.

Whatever fortune stays him from his word. Shak.

what'not' (hwŏt'nŏt'), n. [See what not, under WHAT, pron. & a.] A piece of furniture having shelves on which to keep anything, as bric-a-brac, etc.; an étagère.

what'so (-sō), indef. relative pron., adv., & a. Whatsoever; whosoever; of whatever sort; anything that. Obs. or Archaic.

Whatso he were, of high or low estate. Chaucer.

Lay Folks Catechism.

what'so-ev'er (-ĕv'ẽr), pron. & a. A more formal or intensive form of whatever. "In whatsoever shape he lurk." Milton. "Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do." Gen. xxxi. 16. As an adjective it is sometimes divided by tmesis. "What things soever ye desire." Mark xi. 24.

whaup (hwäp, hwôp), n. [From one of its notes.] A European curlew; the great whaup is the common large species; the little whaup is the whimbrel. Scot. & Dial. Eng.

wheal (hwēl), n. [ME. whele, AS. hwele (doubtful word, perh.) putrefaction, akin to hwelian to putrefy, or inflame; cf. Lettish kwēle inflammation of a wound. Cf. WHELK a pustule.] 1. A pustule; a whelk.

2. Med. A flat burning or itching eminence on the skin, such as is produced by a mosquito bite, or in urticaria.

wheal, n. [Prob. confused with weal a wale. Cf. WHEAL pustule.] A more or less elongated mark raised by a stroke; also, a like mark made in any way; a weal; wale.

wheal, v. t.; WHEALED (hwēld); WHEAL'ING. To make or cause a wheal or wheals upon.

wheal'worm' (hwēl'wûrm'), n. The harvest mite; — so called from the wheals caused by its bite.

wheat (hwēt), n. [ME. whete, AS. hwæte; akin to OS. hwēti, D. weit, G. weizen, OHG. weizzi, Icel. hveiti, Sw. hvete, Dan. hvede, Goth. hwaiteis, and E. white. See WHITE.] 1. A well-known cereal grain, the most important food of temperate climates and next to rice the most largely used of any grain. It yields a fine white flour, which is made into bread, cakes, pastry, etc., of all kinds (see FLOUR). Wheat is also largely used coarsely ground, rolled, or crushed. From the hard wheats macaroni, spaghetti, and similar pastes are made. Wheat is highly nutritious; it contains more starch and protein than corn. Flour milled from the whole or nearly whole grain (called Graham flour, and entire-wheat, or whole-wheat, flour) contains about 2 per cent more proteins and 4 per cent less carbohydrates than ordinary flour, from which the husk of the grain is removed; experiments have proved, however, that the latter is the more digestible. The secondary products of milling wheat, as bran, middlings, etc., also inferior grades of flour, are largely used as food for stock.

Wheat. a Bald (or Beardless) Wheat; b Bearded Wheat.

2. The grass which yields this grain. Common wheat, including all the many varieties cultivated in the great wheat-raising areas of North America, Europe, and Australia, is Triticum sativum (see TRITICUM, 1). It is closely related to rye and barley, having a dense 4-sided spike; the flowering glumes may be awned or awnless (bearded or beardless wheats); the grain varies greatly in color. Besides common wheat, two other species (T. polonicum and T. mosaicoccum) are cultivated. See POLISH WHEAT, ONE-GRAINED. The origin of wheat is unknown, and it no longer occurs in a wild state. It was an important food crop in ancient Egypt and in Palestine, also among the lake dwellers of Switzerland, wheat grains being found commonly in various archæological remains. At the present time the United States exceeds all other countries in the total annual output, but the largest yield of wheat per acre is produced by Great Britain.

3. A field or crop of wheat. See 1st CORN, 3.

wheat of Turkey, Turkey wheat.

wheat aphid, or wheat aphis. Any of several plant lice of the family Aphididæ, which suck the sap of growing wheat, as Macrosiphum granaria and Siphocoryne avenæ.

wheat beetle. a A small, slender, rusty brown beetle (Silvanus surinamensis) whose larvæ feed upon wheat, rice, and other grains. b A very small, reddish brown, oval beetle (Anobium paniceum) whose larvæ eat the interior of grains of wheat. c A grain beetle or flour beetle.

Wheat Beetle (Anobium paniceum). a Imago; b Larva.

wheat bug. Any true bug that damages wheat, as Miris tritici or an allied species.

wheat bulb worm. The larva of a small fly which infests the stalk of wheat, as Meromyza americana in North America or Hylemyia arctica in Europe.

wheat chafer. Any beetle that feeds on growing wheat, esp. Anisoplia austriaca, often a pest in parts of Europe.

wheat cutworm. Any lepidopterous larva that cuts off the stalk of wheat at the base, as the fall army worm and several true cutworms.

wheat'ear' (hwēt'ēr'), n. [Prob. for white-ear, where ear is perh. fr. ME. ers rump (cf. ARSE), mistaken as a pl. Cf. WHITE-EAR, WHITETAIL.] A small bird (Saxicola œnanthe) of northern Europe, Asia, and America, allied to the stonechat and whinchat. The male has a bluish gray back, buffy breast, white rump and belly, blackish wings, and a black line through the eye. It inhabits rocky places chiefly. The white rump is conspicuous in flight.

wheat'en (hwēt'n), a. [AS. hwǣten.] Of, pertaining to, or made of, wheat; as, wheaten bread, straw. Cowper.

wheat fly. a The wheat midge. b The wheat gallfly. c The Hessian fly. d Any of several flies of the genus Oscinis, as O. soror and O. carbonaria, whose larvæ live in the stems of wheat.

wheat gallfly. The imago of the jointworm.

wheat grass. Any grass of the genus Agropyron, esp. A. caninum, of Europe and North America, often distinguished as bearded wheat grass.

wheat midge. a A small two-winged fly (Diplosis tritici) which is very destructive to growing wheat, both in Europe and America. The female lays her eggs in the flowers of wheat, and the larvæ suck the juice of the young kernels and when grown change to pupæ in the earth. b The Hessian fly.

Wheat Midge (Diplosis tritici). a Larvæ in Flowers of Wheat; b Larva on a Grain of Wheat; c Larva; d Female Imago.

wheat midew. b In England, wheat rust. b In the United States, a disease of wheat, etc., caused by a true mildew fungus (Erysiphe graminis); also, the fungus.

wheat moth. Any moth whose larvæ devour the grains of wheat, chiefly after it is harvested; a grain moth, flour moth, or meal moth. See ANGOUMOIS MOTH.

wheat pest. A small midge (Oscinis vastator) that does great damage to wheat in Europe.

wheat rust. A disease of wheat and other grasses caused by the rust fungus Puccinia graminis; also, the fungus itself. Throughout the summer it spreads by means of uredospores, which as they develop cause rusty patches on the leaves and stems. Toward fall the fungus produces teliospores which survive the winter; in the following spring they germinate, forming a promycelium with sterigmata from which basidiospores are abstricted; these develop only upon the leaves of the common barberry, on which they produce scia, or "cluster cups." The spores now arising (æciospores) in turn affect wheat, thus completing the fungal life cycle. The barberry phase in the life cycle is often absent, as in Australia, parts of the United States, etc.

See RUST, n., 2 a; UREDINALES.

wheat sawfly. a A small European sawfly (Cephus pygmæus) whose larva does great injury to wheat by boring in the stalks. b Any of several small American sawflies of the genus Dolerus, as D. sericeus and D. arvensis, whose larvæ injure the stems or heads of wheat. c Pachynematus extensicornis, whose larvæ feed principally on the blades of wheat; — called also grass sawfly.

Wheat Sawfly (Cephus pygmæus). × 1½

Wheat'stone's bridge } (hwēt'stōnz; stŏn). Elec. A de-Wheat'stone bridge } vice for the measurement of resistances, so called because the balance between the resistances to be measured is indicated by the absence of a current in a certain wire forming a bridge or connection between two branches of the circuit. It was invented by Sir Charles Wheatstone, an English physicist.

Diagram of Wheatstone's Bridge. R_1, R_2 Resistances to be compared; R_3, R_4 Known Resistances, which can be varied; G Galvanometer; L Battery. When G shows no current, $R_1 : R_2 = R_3 : R_4$.

Wheatstone's net. Elec. A system of electric circuits in multiple with each other or partly in multiple and partly in series. The simplest form is a Wheatstone's bridge.

Wheatstone's rods. Acoustics. Flexible rods the periods of vibration of which in two planes at right angles are in some exact ratio to one another. When one end of such a rod is fixed, the free end describes in vibrating the corresponding Lissajous figure. So called because devised by Sir Charles Wheatstone.

wheat thrips. Any of numerous thysanopterous insects which infest wheat and damage the grain, as in America Euthrips (or Thrips) tritici or L. graminea and in Europe L. denticornis, L. cerealium, or Anthothrips aculeata.

wheel (hwēl), n. [ME. wheel, hweol, AS. hwēol, hweogul, hweowol; akin to D. wiel, Icel. hvēl, Gr. κύκλος, Skr. cakra, and prob. to W. pel a ball, a sphere, L. colus a distaff, Gr. πόλος axis (cf. 1st POLE), Icel. hjōl a wheel, Dan. hiul, Sw. hjul. Cf. CYCLE, CYCLOPEDIA.] 1. A disk, or a circular frame or body, whether solid or built up, capable of turning on a central axis; as, a cart wheel; a cogwheel; a fly-wheel; a spur wheel. The common vehicle wheel usually consists of a central nave or hub, in which the axle is inserted, connected by radial spokes with fellies over which is shrunk the iron rim or tire. Wheels are used to lessen friction, and hence to diminish tractive force, esp. when supporting a vehicle. When provided with cogs or teeth on the rim, or more rarely on the face, wheels are largely used to transmit and modify force and motion in machinery, etc. For other uses, see BALANCE WHEEL, FLYWHEEL, etc.

Dished Cart Wheel. a Axle, bent to bring bottom of the tapered Spindle (b) horizontal, so as to prevent crowding of Spindle Box against the Nut c. The Wheel is thus swung out of the perpendicular, and if flat, as at d f, it would bear against the ground obliquely, as at f. By dishing it, the Rim takes the shape and position e g, which brings it fairly against the ground, and the Spokes (h) come in turn to the perpendicular, as each is brought to bear.

2. Anything resembling or likened to a wheel (def. 1); specif.: a Naut. A circular frame having handles on the periphery, and an axle so connected with the tiller as to form a means of controlling the rudder for steering. Usually the axle is prolonged in a barrel around which the tiller or wheel ropes are wound, and the larger the wheel the greater the leverage and hence the power obtained. When steam steering gear is used, as in most large vessels, the wheel usually operates ropes connected to the valve of the steering engine which in turn moves the tiller. b A firework which revolves while burning. Cf. PIN WHEEL b. c Needlework. A circular design with radiating bars, in imitation of a cart wheel or a spider's web. d Any of various things shaped like an orb or disk. Chiefly Poetic.

3. An instrument or device in which the chief essential consists of a wheel or wheels; specif.: a Short for POTTER'S WHEEL, SPINNING WHEEL, PADDLE WHEEL, etc. Jer. xviii. 3. b A wheeled vehicle; as: (1) A chariot or car. Poetic. (2) A bicycle, or, rarely, a tricycle. Colloq.

4. An instrument used in an old mode of torture or execution in which the victim was fastened to a cart wheel, or a frame somewhat resembling one, with his legs and arms extended, and his limbs were broken by striking them with an iron bar. Also, the punishment itself.

5. The emblematic wheel of the personified Fortune, symbolizing the rapid alternations of human fate; as, each turn of Fortune's wheel seemed to bring him better things.

6. A turn or revolution; rotation; compass. "The common vicissitude and wheel of things." South.

[He] throws his steep flight in many an aëry wheel. Milton.

7. Mil. & Nav. A movement of troops or vessels in line in which the units preserve alignment and relative positions but change direction, pivoting on a unit at the end of the line or upon an imaginary point beyond it.

8. pl. Fig.: The machinery which propels or operates anything; the moving power or elements; as, the wheels of government; money oils the wheels of life.

9. The refrain or burden of a song. See BOB, n., 11. Obs.

a wheel within a wheel, or wheels within wheels, a complication of circumstances, motives, etc. — w. and axle, Mech., a device consisting of a grooved wheel (turned by a cord or chain) with a rigidly attached axle (for winding up a weight by a cord or chain), together with the supporting standards. Cf. SIMPLE MACHINE. — w. of fortune. a = WHEEL, n., 5, above. b A gambling or lottery device consisting of a wheel which is spun horizontally, articles or sums to which certain marks on its circumference point when it comes to rest being distributed according to varying rules. — w. of life, a zoetrope.

wheel (hwēl), v. t.; WHEELED (hwēld); WHEEL'ING. 1. To convey or move on wheels, or in a wheeled vehicle; as, to wheel a load; to wheel a piano into place; to wheel a wheelbarrow.

whis'ky } (hwĭs'kĭ), n. [Ir. or Gael. uisge water (prob. whis'key } akin to E. water) in uisgebeatha whisky, properly, water of life. Cf. USQUEBAUGH.] A distilled alcoholic liquor made from any of various grains, esp. in Scotland, Ireland, and the United States; also, a similar liquor distilled from potatoes. See DISTILLED LIQUORS. In the United States whisky is generally distilled from rye, wheat, or maize. In Scotland and Ireland it is often made from malted barley, and when distilled in the old-fashioned pot stills from malt dried over open fires it has a smoky flavor. New whisky is colorless and raw of taste, but by storing in oak casks becomes mellow, at the same time extracting coloring matter from the wood. The content of alcohol by weight varies from about 40 to 54 per cent. Much liquor sold as whisky is made by compounding strong alcohol with water and flavoring and coloring materials. Whisky, or spiritus frumenti, is defined by the United States Pharmacopœia to be: "An alcoholic liquid obtained by the distillation of the mash of fermented grain (usually of mixtures of corn, wheat, and rye), and at least two years old. . . . Its specific gravity should not be more than 0.930 nor less than 0.917, corresponding, approximately, to an alcoholic strength of 44 to 50 per cent by weight, or 50 to 58 per cent by volume." Under the United States pure food and drugs acts of 1906 whisky is defined as: "a distillate, at the required alcoholic strength, from the fermented mash of malted cereals, or from malt with unmalted cereals, and containing the congeneric substances formed with ethyl alcohol which are volatile at the ordinary temperature of distillation, and which give the character to the distillate."

Whisky, or Whiskey Insurrection, or Rebellion, the. U. S. Hist. An outbreak, with little disorder, in western Pennsylvania in 1794, resulting from an attempt to enforce an excise law passed in 1791, imposing duties on domestic distilled liquors; — popularly so called. It spread into the border counties of Virginia, but was easily suppressed.

Whisky, or Whiskey, Ring. U. S. Hist. A conspiracy of distillers and government officials during the administration of President Grant to defraud the government of the excise taxes. The frauds were detected in 1875 through the efforts of the Secretary of the Treasury, B. H. Bristow, and most of the offenders were convicted.

whisp (hwĭsp), n. A flock of snipe.

whis'per (hwĭs'pẽr), v. i.; WHIS'PERED (-pẽrd); WHIS'PERING. whis'per, n. 1. A low soft sibilant utterance, which can be heard only by those near at hand; utterance that employs only breath sound without tone; speech without voice. Specif., in phonetics, whisper implies not merely speech without voice, but speech with definite contraction of the glottis. In whispering as opposed to speaking aloud, breathed sounds, as f, p, t, etc., remain unchanged, while sounds like v, b, d, etc., which are voiced in speech, are uttered with the glottis contracted, but not sufficiently so to produce voice. There are two degrees of whisper, the weak, in which there is a slight narrowing of the whole glottis, and the strong, or ordinary form, in which the cord glottis is entirely closed, the breath passing through the cartilage glottis.
The inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.
Soft whispers through the assembly went. Dryden.
2. Act of communicating, or something communicated, by or as by whispering; a secret or private utterance, word, hint, suggestion, insinuation, or the like. "Cutting honest throats by whispers." Scott.

whist, a. [Cf. WHIST, v. & interj.] Silent; mute; still; quiet; — chiefly predicative.
The winds are whist and the owl is still. J. R. Drake.

whist, n. [From WHIST, interj.] A card game for four players (those opposite being partners), played with a pack of 52 cards. The cards are dealt one at a time, and the last card, which belongs to the dealer, is turned to determine the trump suit for that hand. The highest card of the suit led, or the highest trump, if any, in each trick determines the winner of that trick. A player must follow suit if possible. Partners score one for each trick they take in excess of six. Partners holding three of the four honors (ace, king, queen, and knave of trumps) score two points; holding four, score four points. Tricks are scored before honors. In short whist five points make a game; in long whist, ten points make a game; in American whist, so-called, honors are not counted and seven points make a game. Whist is also played commonly in America for continuous points, without counting honors. See DUPLICATE WHIST; LONG WHIST; cf. BRIDGE, MORT.

whis'tle (hwĭs''l), v. i.; WHIS'TLED (-'ld); WHIS'TLING (-lĭng). [AS. hwistlian to hiss; akin to Sw. hvissla, Dan. hvisle, Icel. hvīsla to whisper, and E. whisper. See WHISPER.] 1. To make a kind of shrill musical sound, or series of sounds, by a more or less forcible expulsion of the breath, with the tongue, lips, and teeth in a certain position, the pitch of the sound being varied by changing this position, esp. by motion of the tongue.
2. To emit or utter from the mouth or beak a sound like a whistle, as birds.
3. To make by means of some device a sound like a whistle; as: a To sound a wind or steam whistle; to blow on a whistle (see WHISTLE, n., 3). b To play on a reed, fife, or flute. Chiefly Scot. c To make a shrill sound by blowing through an orifice formed by the fingers or hands.
4. To move, pass, go, or the like, with a shrill sound; to make a sharp shrill sound; as, a bullet whistled past.

white lead (lĕd). a A heavy white substance consisting of lead carbonate, usually more or less basic, and forming a most important pigment; ceruse; — sometimes applied to other white pigments containing lead. The white lead most in favor is made by the old Dutch, or stack, process, by which metallic lead is exposed to the action of acetic acid vapor, moisture, and carbon dioxide. For this purpose a spiral, or grating, of lead is placed in the upper part of a pot containing the dilute acid, and many of these pots are stacked in fermenting tan bark or manure. After two or three months the lead is largely converted into the compound $2PbCO_3{\cdot}Pb(OH)_2$, which is ground and levigated. The same reactions are carried out more rapidly, but with inferior results, by the German, or chamber, process, in which acid vapor, steam, and carbon dioxide are supplied to lead plates arranged in a chamber. The French process consists in preparing a basic salt of lead (commonly by boiling litharge with lead acetate) and precipitating from it basic carbonate by means of carbon dioxide. There are various other processes, some of them electrolytic. As a pigment white lead combines purity of color with great body, dries quickly, and does not crack; but it is costly, is poisonous, and tends to darken owing to the action of hydrogen sulphide. It is often adulterated with barytes. b Native lead carbonate; cerussite.

Whose and whom were formerly common with neuter antecedents; who and whom are still used of animals, etc., esp. in personification; whose is sometimes used of anything to avoid an awkward construction with of which.
Adders who with cloven tongues Do kiss me into madness. Shak.
The heavy door whose bronze network closes the place. Ruskin.
Who may introduce a clause that is either restrictive in force, or continuative, i. e. adding an almost coördinate idea. See under THAT, pron., 3.
3. As a compound or indefinite relative, with its antecedent implied: Whoever; the person or persons that.
Who cheapens life abates the fear of death. Young.
Formerly also, one who; one that; as in the now archaic phrase, as who should say.
As who should say, it were a very dangerous matter if a man in any point should be found wiser than his forefathers were. Robinson (More's Utopia).

Syn. — WHO, WHICH, THAT are here compared as relative pronouns. In modern usage WHO refers to persons (less commonly to animals); WHICH, to animals or inanimate objects; THAT may be used of either persons, animals, or things. If a relative clause simply conveys an additional idea, who or which (preceded by a comma) is usually employed; if the relative clause is explanatory or restrictive, either who, which, or that, without a preceding comma, is used; as, this gentleman, who (not that) was here yesterday, desires to see you; the gentleman who (or that) was here yesterday desires to see you; knock at the first door, which you will find open; knock at the first door that (or which) you find open. In the restrictive use some writers prefer that, esp. instead of which.

who all, all who; as, I forget who all were there. Colloq., U. S. & Canada. — who's who, an indirect locution, meaning a correct idea of persons as to their standing or opinions.

who-ev'er (hōō-ĕv'ĕr), pron. Whatever person; any person soever; he or she who; as, he shall be punished, whoever he may be. "Whoever envies or repines." Milton.
"Whoever the king favors." Shak.

whole (hōl), a. [ME. hole, hol, hool, hal, complete, all, well, healthy, AS. hāl well, sound, healthy; akin to OFries. & OS. hēl, D. heel, G. heil, Icel. heill, Sw. hel whole, Dan. heel, Goth. hails well, sound, OIr. cél augury. Cf. HALE, HAIL to greet, HEAL to cure, HEALTH, HOLY.] 1. Possessing, or being in a state of, health and soundness; healthy; sound; well; hence, healed.
They that be whole need not a physician. Matt. ix. 12.
When Sir Lancelot's deadly hurt was whole. Tennyson.
2. Not broken; unimpaired; uninjured; integral; as, the egg is whole; the vessel is whole.
My life is yet whole in me. 2 Sam. i. 9.
3. Containing the total amount, number, etc.; comprising all the parts; complete; total; entire; as, the whole earth; the whole solar system; the whole army; the whole nation. "On their whole host I flew unarmed." Milton.
Who saw life steadily and saw it whole. M. Arnold.
4. In perfect agreement or accord. Obs. or R.

Syn. — WHOLE, TOTAL, ENTIRE, COMPLETE, PERFECT, INTACT. WHOLE and TOTAL (except in the sense of "absolute, unqualified"; as, a total eclipse, total blindness) refer to an object as made up of parts, whole implying that none are lacking, total, that all are present and taken together as an aggregate; as, a whole week, the whole creation; "half a share . . . a whole one, I" (Shak.); the total amount, his total income from sources; "These foreign lands constituted the total world to a Greek" (De Quincey). ENTIRE and COMPLETE do not necessarily imply parts. Entire (or in a few phrases, whole) describes an object as continuous or unbroken; complete refers to it as without deficiency (from the point of view of a given standard), or as having attained the limit of its development; as, an entire day, an entire specimen; cf., with a whole skin; "one entire and perfect chrysolite" (Shak.); "I . . . have always regretted that you don't give us an entire work, and not sprinkle yourself in detached pieces" (Byron); "I have the whole plan entire from beginning to end in my mind" (Coleridge); The Complete Angler; complete combustion, a complete revolution of the sun; "the submission of man's nothing-perfect to God's all-complete" (R. Browning). PERFECT, so far as it differs from complete, lays greater stress on the possession of consummate excellence, or on freedom from blemish or defect; that is INTACT which is left entire or unimpaired; as, a perfect circle, crystal, illustration; "a perfect poem like Lycidas, a perfect fiction like Esmond, a perfect handling of a theory like Newman's Idea of a University" (W. Pater); "The group was in wonderful preservation: the figure of Bacchus intact, that of the young faun lacking only the arm" (Vernon Lee); "That high courage which enabled Fielding . . . to keep his manly benevolence and love of truth intact" (Thackeray). The same object may be, according to the point of view, at the same time whole, complete, and entire; as, a whole bridge may be shipped in parts, but it is not entire so long as the parts are not put together, nor complete so long as anything remains to be done. When, however, the last part is in place, the bridge is whole, entire, and complete. See ALL, SUM, PURE.

3. Power coupled with desire or intention; specif.: a Arbitrary disposal; power to control, dispose, or determine.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.
Ps. xxvii. 12.

b Power of controlling one's actions or emotions; self-control; as, the will to endure; a man of iron will.

4. The act or experience of willing; specif.: a The settlement of mental uncertainty or indecision; choice or decision of a mental issue; a volition (in sense 2).

"Will" . . . is frequently substituted for "volition," as when I say that my hand moves in obedience to my will. Stewart.

b The total conscious process involved in effecting a decision; desire, struggle, and decision viewed as a single mental act.

5. The power of choosing; also, the power of choosing and of acting in accordance with choice; sometimes, in a broader sense, a disposition to act according to certain principles, or to conform, in conduct and thought, to general or ideal ends; as, the moral will; the will to believe. Will is one of the three great divisions into which psychologists usually divide the powers of the mind (the others being cognition and feeling). Originally its meaning appears to have been desire, or desire coupled with an ideal object or specific intention; hence, choice. But hardly secondary is the supplementary notion of power or efficiency, or of action leading to realization of desire, which in certain conceptions of free will appears as an inward spontaneity or initiative capable of running counter to all natural motives. The Greek conception of will (βούλησις) seems to have been primarily that of willingness, or willing intention; Aristotle uses προαίρησις for free will; with Aristotle it was rational desire, or desire predetermined by reason. However, the use of the term θυμός (soul, breath of life, from a root meaning to rush onward, as the wind) for will, conveys the correlative implication of power or initiating force. Plato held that the preëxistent soul chooses its own abode in life, the will being thus predetermined by its own act; in life it is not free, for Plato maintained with Socrates that no one voluntarily chooses evil. But the real basis of the controversy over free will was the Christian doctrine of the fall and redemption of mankind, the question being whether man unaided by divine grace could choose the right. The elements of spontaneous activity and unconstrained choice, thus emphasized, have become salient in the popular understanding of the term, will and free will being to all intents the same. That the experience denoted by the two terms is the same is evidenced by the use and impressiveness of the appeal to immediate consciousness in proof of the will's freedom. This experience is the object with which modern psychological attempts to define the will are concerned. With the rise of physiological psychology, the question was no longer between free will and theological determinism, or predestination, but between free will and physical determinism, or automatism. In accordance with its parallelistic tendencies, modern psychology (disciples of Wundt) aims to be noncommittal on the question, the will being interpreted subjectively, often as a kind of feeling accompanying the activities of motor nerves. In general, in the modern view, the will is the mental power or function of acting with conscious design. In its broadest sense, it is equivalent to conation (in which Hamilton distinguished desire from volition). In a narrower sense, it is the mental experience involved in one's own unconstrained activity, especially in bringing to pass a desired end. "Much confusion in theology has arisen from losing sight of the true meaning of the expression 'God's grace,' which properly understood does not efface man's freedom, but, on the contrary, gives freedom or self-activity. 'Free will' is therefore the first gift of grace; it creates individuality and freedom from nature, and hence independence and spontaneity. To yield to nature is to reject or oppose grace and resign one's freedom or self-activity. To lose sight of this meaning of grace is to lose sight of the meaning of moral responsibility. Again, to deny freedom on the ground that the will is governed by the strongest motive is to forget that a motive is a product of the intellect, produced by abstracting or thinking away the real and setting up in its place an ideal more desirable. Hence both the volition and the motive itself are the creation of the ego and neither is an external necessity. The ideal which is the essence of the motive does not exist as a real thing until the will realizes it. To say a motive constrains the will is to say that something acts before it exists." W. T. Harris.

Appetite is the will's solicitor, and the will is appetite's controller; what we covet according to the one, by the other we often reject. Hooker.

The will is plainly that by which the mind chooses anything.
J. Edwards.

St. Augustine attaches special importance to the idea of will. . . . It is the will that moves the intellect to action, and it is the element of the act of faith that makes faith meritorious. Free will is the proximate cause of moral evil. Wm. Turner.

The proposition that the will is free is commonly understood, alike by those who assert and those who deny it, to mean that man has, at least within certain limits, the power of self-determination, of yielding to or resisting motives, — those which arise within him as well as those which plainly have their origin without him, — and of modifying his own character in some degree. Dict. of Bible (Hastings).

6. A metaphysical reality supposed to resemble, more or less, the human experience of willing. See VOLUNTARISM.

By "will" he [Paulsen] does not mean "rational desire," which is its proper meaning, but inapplicable to nature; nor unconscious irrational will, which is Schopenhauer's forced meaning; nor unconscious intelligent will, which is Hartmann's more correct meaning, though inapplicable to nature. He does mean by "will" is instinct, impulsive feeling, a "will to live," not indeed unconscious, but often subconscious, without idea, without reasoning about ends and means, yet pursuing ends — in short, what he calls, after K. E. von Baer, Zielstrebigkeit.
Thos. Case (Encyc. Brit.).

7. Law. The legal declaration of a person's mind as to the manner in which he would have his property or estate disposed of after his death; the written instrument, legally executed, by which a man makes disposition of his estate, to take effect after his death. The term testament, originally a Roman and Civil law term, is often now used as synonymous with will. In English law the will developed from the earlier post-obit gift, and for a time (about the 12th century) was limited (except in case of burgage tenements) to disposition of chattels (which, in the absence of a will, fell into the hands of the church to administer for the good of the dead man's soul), not primarily to transmit the inheritance, but to provide for the welfare of his soul and for his burial. A will or testament may be nuncupative (oral) or written (see TESTAMENT, 2). Orig. an oral will might consist of any authenticated declaration by the deceased on his deathbed of his wish as to the disposition of his goods, but now such a will is valid in English law only under exceptional conditions (see NUNCUPATIVE WILL b), a written will duly authenticated by witnesses and sealed being in general the only valid form. In England the restriction on the disposition of land by will was temporarily obviated by creating a use, and was largely removed by the Statute of Wills (32 Hen. VIII.) and later by abolition of feudal tenures (by 12 Ch. II.). In the United States in general any form of property may be disposed of by will.

8. Scots Law. That part of a summons or other signet letter expressing its will or command, beginning "Our will is."

Syn. — WILL, VOLITION are sometimes interchangeable. But in ordinary usage (for technical distinctions see defs.) WILL commonly denotes the power or faculty of willing or choosing, VOLITION, the exercise of that power, or the act; as, "that iron will" (Tennyson); "Attention is the first and fundamental thing in volition" (W. James).

with a will, with willingness and zeal; with all one's heart or strength; earnestly; heartily.

will (wĭl), v. t.; WILLED (wĭld); WILL'ING. Indic. present I will, thou willest, he wills or willeth; we, ye, they will. [Cf. AS. willian. See WILL, n.] 1. To wish or long for; to desire. Archaic.

'T is a withered pear; will you anything with it? Shak.

2. To enjoin or command; to direct; order. Obs.

They willed me say so, madam. Shak.

3. To form a distinct volition of; to determine by an act of choice; hence, to ordain; decree.

Two things he [God] willeth, that we should be good, and that we should be happy. Barrow.

4. To influence by one's will, as through hypnotism; as, he willed her to raise her arm.

5. To give or direct the disposal of by will or testament; to bequeath; devise; as, to will one's estate to a son; also, to order or direct by testament; as, he willed that his estate should be divided among his children.

will, v. i. To exercise volition; to choose; decide; determine; decree.

At Winchester he lies, so himself willed. Robert of Brunne.

will, v. i. & auxiliary; pres., & sing., 1st & 3d pers. WILL, 2d WILT, pl. WILL; pret. WOULD; p. p. (Obs.) WOLD, WOULD Infinitive and imperative lacking. [ME. willen, pret. wolde; AS. willan, pres. ind., 1st pers. wille, 2d pers. wilt, 3d pers. will(e), pret. wolde; akin to OS. willian, OFries. willa, D. willen, G. wollen, OHG. wollan, wellan, Icel. & Sw. vilja, Dan. ville, Goth. wiljan, OSlav. voliti, L. velle to wish, volo I wish; cf. Skr. vṛ to choose, to prefer. The pres. ind. in E. & AS. is orig. a pret. optative. Cf. VOLUNTARY, WELCOME, WELL, adv.] 1. As v. t.: Wish; desire; incline to have; — now chiefly in the form would (which see).

A wife as of herself no thing ne sholde [should] Wille in effect, but as her husband wolde [would]. Chaucer.
Caleb said unto her, What wilt thou? Judg. i. 14.

2. As auxil., followed by the infinitive without to (see also WOULD): a Am (is, are, etc.) willing or desirous to, or, emphatically, determined to. Hence, simply, am (is, are, etc.) to; — forming future-tense phrases. See SHALL, 2. b Am (is, are, etc.) accustomed to; have a practice or habit to.

They will go to Sunday schools, through storms their brothers are afraid of. . . . They will stand behind a table at a fair all day.
O. W. Holmes.

☞ Sometimes, esp. in dialect, will and its verb are used with the force merely of the simple verb; as in, I 'm thinking this will be [is] your birthday.

Syn. — WILL, SHALL are often confused by careless speakers and writers. In the first person, SHALL alone denotes simple futurity; WILL implies willingness, consent, promise, or determination. In the second and third persons, WILL alone (except in questions in the second person, where shall is the proper auxiliary) denotes simple futurity, and SHALL implies command, threat, promise, or determination. But in subordinate clauses shall is the proper auxiliary for simple futurity in all three persons, when the subject is the same as that of the principal verb. See MAY, OUGHT.

will (wĭl), v. i. To be willing; to be inclined or disposed; to be pleased; to wish; desire.

And behold, there came a leper and worshiped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. And Jesus . . . touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. Matt. viii. 2, 3.

☞ This word has been confused with will, v. i., to choose, which, unlike this, is entirely of the weak conjugation.

will I, nill I, or will ye, nill ye, or will he, nill he [see NILL, v. i.], whether I, you, or he will it or not; hence, without choice; compulsorily; — sometimes corrupted into willy-nilly. "If I must take service willy-nilly." J. H. Newman.

"Land for all who would till it, and reading and writing will ye, nill ye." Lowell.

Wil'lans's line (wĭl'ănz-zĭz). [After P. W. Willans, Eng. steam-engine expert.] Steam Engines. A curve, plotted from Cartesian coördinates, having as ordinates the total steam consumed by an engine per hour and as abscissæ the corresponding horse powers (indicated, brake, or electric). When the horse power is varied by altering the initial steam pressure without changing the cut-off, this curve is sensibly a straight line passing above the origin. The equation to this straight line is called Willans's law.

Syn. — WIND, AIR, BREEZE, GUST, FLAW, BLAST, GALE, STORM, TEMPEST. WIND is the general word for air naturally in motion, with whatever degree of velocity; as, "a sound as of a rushing mighty wind" (Acts ii. 2); "the soft wind blowing over meadowy holms" (Tennyson). A BREEZE is a relatively light, but fresh, wind; AIR (chiefly poetical in this sense) denotes a gently stirring breeze; as, "The fair breeze blew, the white foam flew, the furrow followed free" (Coleridge); "the breeze murmured the musical woods" (Shelley); "when sweet airs come seaward from heaths starred with broom" (M. Arnold); cf. "Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell" (Shak.). GUST, BLAST, and FLAW denote a sudden and violent rush of wind, usually of short duration; as, "An angry gust of wind puffed out his torch" (Tennyson); "blasts that blow the poplar white, and lash with storm the streaming pane" (id.); "like a great sea mark, standing every flaw" (Shak.). A GALE (often poetical, esp. in the 18th century for a gentle breeze or "zephyr") is more violent than a breeze, more continuous than a gust, blast, or flaw; as, "At the close of day a stiffer gale at east arose" (Dryden). A STORM is a violent disturbance of the atmosphere; a TEMPEST is an extremely violent or furious storm; both may be attended by rain, snow, hail, or lightning; as, "the pelting of this pitiless storm" (Shak.); "an ever-fixed mark that looks on tempests and is never shaken" (id.). For HURRICANE, TORNADO, and CYCLONE, see defs.

If on looking across the two the top edges correspond exactly, the surface is out of winding, i. e., not twisted. Called also winding sticks. — w. tackle, Naut., a tackle consisting of a fixed triple block and a double or triple movable block hooked to a winding pendant, for hoisting heavy articles in or out of a vessel.

wind'ing (wīn'dĭng), n. [From WIND to blow.] Naut. A call on a boatswain's whistle.

wind instrument (wĭnd). Music. An instrument sounded by wind, esp. by the breath. Those blown by the breath are classified as wood-wind instruments or wood winds, as the flute, oboe, bassoon, clarinet, and brass-wind instruments, or brass winds, as the trumpet, horn, trombone, tuba. The sounds of wind instruments are produced on the principle either of the flute pipe or the reed pipe. The way in which the air column vibrates or the distances between nodes and loops, and hence the pitch, are changed in various ways, as by the slide of the trombone, the holes of the flute, or the intensity of blast in a trumpet.

wind'jam'mer (wĭnd'jăm'ẽr), n. 1. Naut. A sailing vessel or one of its crew; — orig. so called contemptuously by sailors on steam vessels. Collog.

2. An army bugler or trumpeter. Mil. Slang.

wind'lass (wĭnd'lăs; formerly wĭn'-), n. [ME. windas (prob. influenced by windel, in comp.; see WINDLE), of Scand. orig.; cf. Icel. vindáss (cf. also Icel. vindilāss, and D. windas), fr. vinda to wind + āss a pole; cf. Goth. ans a beam. See WIND to turn.] 1. Any of various machines for hoisting or hauling. The simplest form consists of a horizontal barrel for the hoisting rope, supported in vertical standards and turned by a crank with a handle (cf. DIFFERENTIAL WINDLASS). The windlass used on ships for raising the anchor consisted essentially in its earlier form of a horizontal barrel, drum, or spindle, with whelps, turned by handspikes inserted in radial holes near each end (cf. CAPSTAN). Most large modern ships use a powerful steam winch on the forecastle head. A windlass sometimes used in agriculture has a vertical drum and is operated by a portable steam engine (cf. DIRECT SYSTEM).

2. An apparatus resembling a winch or windlass for bending the bow of an arbalest, or crossbow. Obs. Shak.

wind'lass, v. t. & i.; -LASSED (-lăst); -LASS-ING. To hoist or haul with or as with a windlass; to use a windlass.

wind'mill' (wĭnd'mĭl'; formerly also wĭn'-, wĭnd'-), n. 1. A mill operated by the wind, usually by the wind acting on oblique vanes or sails which radiate from a horizontal shaft.

Cf. PANTANEMONE.

Modern Windmill. a a Sails; b Vane to bring Windmill into the wind.

An old form of Windmill, with sides cut away to show the Interior.

2. a A fanciful scheme or plan. Now Rare. b An imaginary wrong, evil, or opponent; — esp. in the phrase to fight windmills, in allusion to those which Don Quixote took for giants.

windmill grass. Any of several species of Chloris; esp., the Australian Chloris truncata, having numerous long spikes disposed like the vanes of a windmill.

win'dow (wĭn'dō), n. [ME. windowe, windoge, fr. Scand.; cf. Icel. vindauga window, properly, wind eye; akin to Dan. vindue. See WIND, n., EYE.] 1. An opening in the wall of a building for admission of light and air, usually closed by casements or sashes containing transparent material, as glass, and capable of being opened and shut.

2. Arch. The shutter, casement, sash with its fittings, or other framework, which closes a window opening.

3. Fig.: a An eyelid. Obs. Shak. b The eye. Rare or Poet. "Her two blue windows." Shak. c An opening, or an imaginary opening, like, or suggestive of, a window. "The windows of heaven." Gen. vii. 2.

Syn. — WINDOW, CASEMENT. As a synonym for WINDOW, CASEMENT (which properly denotes a window sash or frame which opens on hinges) is chiefly elevated or poetical in its associations; as, "Come to the window, sweet is the night air" (M. Arnold); "magic casements, opening on the foam of perilous seas in faery lands forlorn" (Keats). See DOOR.

win'dow (wĭn'dō), v. t.; WIN'DOWED (-dōd); WIN'DOW-ING. 1. To furnish with a window or windows; — usually in p. p. and in composition; as, a many-windowed house.

2. Openwork on the front of a woman's dress. Obs.

window frame. The frame of a window which receives and holds the sashes or casement.

window glass. Glass, usually of the soda-lime variety, in shapes suitable for windows; esp., cylinder glass.

window oyster. A marine bivalve shell (Placuna placenta) native of the East Indies and China. Its valves are very broad, thin, and translucent, and are said to have been used formerly in place of glass.

win'dow-pane' (wĭn'dō-pān'), n. 1. Arch. A pane in a window. See PANE, n., 4 b.

2. A thin spotted American turbot (Lophopsetta maculata) remarkable for its translucency. It is not valued for food.

window tax. A tax or duty formerly levied in England on all windows, or openings for light, above the number of eight in houses of cities or towns. It was replaced in 1851 by a house duty, based on rental. In France there is still a tax on all openings in a building, as doors and windows; in 1900 it yielded 91 millions of francs.

wind'pipe' (wĭnd'pīp'; formerly also wĭn'-, wĭnd'-), n. The passage for the breath from the larynx to the lungs; the trachea; weasand. See TRACHEA.

wind'-rode' (wĭnd'rōd'), a. Naut. Caused to ride with head to the wind, practically unaffected by tide or current; — said of a vessel at anchor with wind and tide approximately opposed, and opposed to tide-rode.

wind rose (wĭnd). [Cf. G. windrose, D. windroos.] 1. A table of the points of the compass, giving the states of the barometer, etc., connected with prevalent winds.

2. A European poppy (Papaver argemone). b A purple-flowered papaveraceous plant of southern Europe (Roemeria hybrida).

wind'row' (wĭnd'rō'; wĭn'rō'), n. [wind + row.] 1. A row of hay raked up to dry before being rolled into cocks; also, any similar row for drying, as of sheaves of grain.

2. The green border of a field, dug up and laid in drying rows, to be used for mending other land. Obs. Eng.

3. By extension, a wind-swept line or row, as of dry leaves or dust, of foam, surf, etc.

wind'row', v. t.; WIND'ROWED' (-rōd'); WIND'ROW'ING. To arrange (as hay, grain sheaves, peat, etc.) in windrows.

wind'row'er (-ẽr), n. a A curved finger device on the rear of the cutter bar of a mowing machine to windrow the swath. b A curved finger device on the rear of a reaping machine to windrow the grain.

wind sail (wĭnd). a Naut. A wide tube or funnel of canvas, used to convey air for ventilation into the lower compartments of a vessel. b The sail or vane of a windmill.

wind scale. A systematic arrangement of words or numbers used for expressing and recording the velocity or force of the wind. The following are some of the wind scales that have been used: (1) Beaufort's scale (0-12), defined in 1805 by Admiral Beaufort. (2) The Continental or land scale (0-6), for the use of European observers at stations on land. (3) The Mannheim or old Continental scale (0-4), adopted in 1700 by the Mannheim Association. (4) The "ten" scale (0-10), adopted by the Smithsonian Institution about 1850 and the International Meteorological Congress about 1880. (5) "Nine," "eight," and "seven" scales, used locally, but not generally recommended. (6) The latest United States Weather Bureau "six" scale for use in official forecasts. The relations between these scales are shown approximately in the following table by the equivalent wind velocities in miles per hour:

WIND SCALE

wine (wīn), n. [ME. win, AS. wīn, fr. L. vinum (cf. OS., OFries., & OHG. wīn, G. wein, D. wijn, Goth. wein, Icel. vīn; all fr. L.); akin to Gr. οἶνος, ϝοῖνος, and prob. to L. vitis vine, viere to twist together, and E. withy. Cf. VINE, VINEYARD, VINOUS, WITHY.] 1. Fermented juice of grapes. Wine is essentially a dilute solution of alcohol, to which its stimulating properties are due, together with small quantities of certain ethers and esters, which impart to it the bouquet. The properties of these compounds, in connection with the amounts of sugar, albuminoids, glycerin, carbon dioxide, acid, coloring matter, etc., determine its character. The composition depends upon the grapes used, the climate and soil, and the various details of handling. Red wine is made by allowing the juice of dark-colored grapes to ferment in contact with the skins so as to extract their coloring matter; wine made in other ways is yellow or colorless and is termed white wine. Wines are further characterized as dry or sweet, still or sparkling, heavy or light, full or thin, rough or smooth. In making the strong wines alcohol is added, since the maximum of alcohol produced by fermentation is not much over 13 per cent. Wine is considerably used in pharmacy as a menstruum, and, with a qualifying phrase or word indicating the medicinal substance dissolved, the word (cf. WINUM) appears in the names of many solutions; as, wine of opium; orange wine. The varieties of wine are very many; their names are derived from the variety of grape, place of manufacture, etc. Wherever possible, varieties have been described and classified under certain types. See BORDEAUX, 2; BURGUNDY, 2; CANARY, n., 2; MADEIRA, 2; MALAGA, 2; MUSCATEL, 1; RHINE WINE; SHERRY. Wines not so classified are described in their Vocabulary places.

2. The fermented, or, loosely, the unfermented, juice of any fruit or plant used as a beverage; as, currant wine.

3. The effect of drinking wine in excess; intoxication.

wing (wĭng), n. [ME. winge, wenge; prob. of Scand. origin; cf. Dan. & Sw. vinge, Icel. vængr.] 1. An organ of aërial flight; one of the movable paired appendages by means of which certain animals, as most birds, bats, and many insects, are able to fly; also, such an appendage, even though rudimentary, if possessed by an animal belonging to a group characterized by the power of flight. Among vertebrates the wing is always a modified fore limb, corresponding to the arm of a man, and such organs are possessed only by birds, bats, and pterodactyls. The tegumentary expansions of flying lemurs, flying squirrels, and modern flying lizards, or dragons, are patagia, or parachutes. In flying fishes the large pectoral fins serve as the means of limited flight. In birds the wing surface is formed chiefly of feathers. In bats and pterodactyls it is a membranous skin stretched between the side of the body and one or more of the greatly elongated digits. See BIRD, 2; 4th BAT, PTERODACTYL. In invertebrates true wings are possessed only by insects, which usually have two pairs. They consist of a double chitinous membrane strengthened by numerous tubular veins, and may have one or both surfaces covered with minute overlapping scales. In mythology, art, etc., wings are ascribed to various beings, as angels, cherubim, gods, or dragons. Wings are often symbolical, as of speed, protecting care, or omnipresence.

2. Any of various winglike structures in other animals, esp. the broad thin anterior lobes of the foot of a pteropod.

wire'less, a. Having no wire or wires; specif., Elec., designating, or pertaining to, a method of telegraphy, telephony, etc., in which the messages, etc., are transmitted through space by electric waves; as, a wireless message. wireless telegraphy or telegraph, Elec., any system of telegraphy employing no connecting wire or wires between the transmitting and receiving stations. Although more or less successful researches were made on the subject by Joseph Henry, Hertz, Oliver Lodge, and others, the first commercially successful system was that of Guglielmo Marconi, patented in March, 1897. Marconi employed electric waves of high frequency set up by an induction coil in an oscillator, these waves being launched into space through a lofty antenna. The receiving apparatus consisted of another antenna in circuit with a coherer and small battery for operating through a relay the ordinary telegraphic receiver. This apparatus contains the essential features of all the systems now in use. Cf. ANTENNA, 3; ANTICOHERER; CAPACITY CAGE; COHERER; HERTZIAN WAVES; MARCONI'S LAW; SELECTIVE, a., 2; SYNTONIC; SYNTONIZE; TUNE, 4, etc. — w. telephone, an apparatus or contrivance for wireless telephony. — w. telephony, telephony without wires, usually employing electric waves of high frequency emitted from an oscillator or generator, as in wireless telegraphy. A telephone transmitter causes fluctuations in these waves, it being the fluctuations only which affect the receiver.

wire'less, n. Elec. Short for WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY, WIRELESS TELEPHONY, etc.; as, to send a message by wireless.

wire'less-ly (wīr'lĕs-lĭ), adv. Elec. Without wires; by electric wave transmission; as, to telegraph wirelessly.

wisdom literature. The class of ancient Hebrew writings which deal reflectively with general ethical and religious topics, as distinguished from the prophetic and liturgical literature, and from the law. It is comprised chiefly in the books of Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastics, Ecclesiastes, and Wisdom of Solomon. The "wisdom" (Hokhmah) of these writings consists in detached sage utterances on concrete issues of life, without the effort at philosophical system that appeared in the later Hellenistic reflective writing beginning with Philo Judæus.

wisdom tooth. The last, or back, tooth of the full set on each half of the jaw in man; — familiarly so called, because appearing comparatively late (from the 17th to the 21st year, or later), when the person may be supposed to have acquired some wisdom.

7. Cognizant; aware. Obs., exc., with to, in the modern slang phrase to be wise to something.
Syn. — Sagacious, discerning, sound, discreet, enlightened, well-advised, circumspect, cautious, wary. — WISE, JUDICIOUS, SENSIBLE, SANE, PRUDENT, PROVIDENT, POLITIC, EXPEDIENT. WISE (see KNOWLEDGE) implies sound and discerning judgment esp. in the practical concerns of life and conduct; JUDICIOUS (see JUDICIAL) suggests the exercise of a wise discretion; SENSIBLE, as here compared (see SENSIBLE), implies sagacity, or accordance with the dictates of common sense; SANE connotes esp. balance and lucidity; as, "men . . . temperate, calm, and wise" (Pope); "after praise and scorn . . . attain the wise indifference of the wise" (Tennyson); "I am perfectly indifferent to the judgment of all, except the few who are indeed judicious" (Cowper); "I really think that, for wise men, this is not judicious" (Burke); a moral, sensible, and well-bred man" (Cowper); a sensible plan; "I . . . have proved him every way one of our . . . most valorous, sanest, and most obedient" (Tennyson); a sane and wholesome attitude towards life. PRUDENT (see PRUDENT, PRUDENCE) implies cautious forethought, or circumspection in judgment or conduct; PROVIDENT suggests more definitely practical foresight and economy in providing for wants; as, "The prudent man looketh well to his going" (Prov. xiv. 15); "the parsimonious emmet, provident of future" (Milton); "No man can be provident of his time, that is not prudent in the choice of his company" (Jeremy Taylor). POLITIC implies diplomatic, sometimes artful, often cunning or crafty, management; that is EXPEDIENT (often contrasted with right) which conduces to (frequently selfish) advantage; the word sometimes suggests accordance with prudential rather than moral considerations; as, "politic maxims" (Milton); "The question with me is . . . whether it is not your interest. . . . Is a politic act worse for being a generous one?" (Burke); "Am I politic? Am I subtle? Am I a Machiavel?" (Shak.); "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient" (1 Cor. x. 23); "too fond of the right to pursue the expedient" (Goldsmith). See CAREFUL, SHREWD, CUNNING, RATIONAL.

wish'bone' (wĭsh'bōn'), n. The forked bone in front of the breastbone in most birds; the furculum, or merrythought. It is formed chiefly of the two clavicles, which are ankylosed together at their median or lower end and usually articulate movably with both the scapula and coracoid at the other end. At their median point of union there is often a process (the hypocleidium), which is large and flattened in the domestic fowl. The name alludes to the superstitious or joking custom of two persons breaking this bone by pulling each apart to see who will get the longer piece, the sign being that this person will be married first or will gain a wish formed at the instant.

wish'ful (-fo͝ol), a. [Cf. WISTFUL.] 1. Having desire, or ardent desire; longing.
2. Showing desire; wistful; as, wishful eyes.

wit (wĭt), v. t. & i.; inf. (to) WIT; pres. sing. WOT, pl. WITE; pret. WIST(E); p. p. WIST; p. pr. & vb. n. WIT'(T)ING. (See the Note below.) [ME. witen, pres. ich wot, wat, I know (wot), pret. wiste, AS. witan, pres. wāt, pret. wiste, wisse; akin to OFries. wita, OS. wītan, D. weten, G. wissen, OHG. wizzan, Icel. vita, Sw. veta, Dan. vide, Goth. witan to observe, wait I know, Russ. vidyet' to see, L. videre, Gr. ἰδεῖν to see, οἶδα I know, Skr. vid to know, learn, véda I know; cf. Skr. vid to find. Cf. HISTORY, IDEA, IDOL, -OID, TWIT, VEDA, VISION, WISE, a. & n., WOT.] To know; learn. "I wot and wist alway." Chaucer.
☞ The present tense was inflected as follows: sing. 1st pers. wot; 2d pers. wost, or wot(t)est; 3d pers. wot, or wot(t)eth; pl. witen, or wite. The following variant forms also occur: pres. sing. 1st & 3d pers. wat, woot; pres. pl. witen, or write, weete, woote, wod; pret. wuste (southern dialect); p. pr. witting. Later, other variant or corrupt forms are found, as, in Shakespeare, 3d pers. sing. pres. wots.
Brethren, we do you to wit [make you to know] of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia. 2 Cor. viii. 1.
Thou wost full little what thou meanest. Chaucer.
We witen not what thing we prayen here. Chaucer.
When that the sooth is wist. Chaucer.
☞ This verb is now used only in the infinitive, to wit, and esp. in legal language, to call attention to a particular thing, or to a more particular specification of what has preceded, and is equivalent to namely or that is to say.

wit (wĭt), n. [AS. witt, wit; akin to OFries. wit, G. witz, OHG. wizzī, Icel. vit, Dan. vid, Sw. vett. See WIT, v.]
1. Mind; intellect; understanding; sense.
Who knew the wit of the Lord? Wyclif (Rom. xi. 34).
Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth. Sir J. Davies
2. A mental faculty, or power of the mind; — chiefly pl., and in certain phrases: as, to lose one's wits, at one's wit's end, and the like. "Men's wittes ben so dull." Chaucer.
I will stare him out of his wits. Shak.
3. Wisdom; learning; erudition. Obs.
4. Skill; art; ingenuity. Obs.
5. Idea; thought; also, a trick or skillful device.
6. Meaning; significance; sense; import.
7. Cognizance; information; knowledge. Obs.
8. Felicitous perception or expression of associations between ideas or words not usually connected, such as to produce an amusing surprise; also, the power of so combining such ideas or their expression. Wit therefore consists typically in a neat turn of speech by which disconnected ideas are unexpectedly associated, often as being senses of the same word. Cf. HUMOR, 5. "An unexpected fitness, then, seems to form the essence of wit." Trench.
9. [Prob. the same word, and not fr. ME. wite, wete, weote, one who knows, a witness, AS. wita one who knows, a wise man.] A person of learning, knowledge, esp. of human life and nature, or keen perceptions; now, esp., a person keen and quick in perception of felicitous and amusing associations of ideas or words or the intellectually entertaining congruities and incongruities of life; more esp., one happy in expressing them; one distinguished for clever and amusing sayings, for quick and bright repartee, or the like.
Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe. L'Estrange.
Syn. WIT, HUMOR. WIT is more purely intellectual than humor, and implies swift perception of the incongruous; it is primarily verbal in its expression, and depends for its effect chiefly on ingenuity or unexpectedness of turn, or patness of application; HUMOR commonly implies broader human sympathies than wit, so that its sense of the incongruous is more kindly, and is often blended with pathos; as, "[The] essence [of wit] consists in a partial and incomplete view of whatever it touches" (Holmes); "Only Shakespeare had that sense of humor which, like the universal solvent sought by the alchemists, so fused together all the elements of a character (as in Falstaff) that any question of good or evil, of dignified or ridiculous, is silenced by the apprehension of its thorough humanity" (Lowell); "His [Chaucer's] humor pervades his comic tales like sunshine, and never dazzles the attention by a sudden flash" (id.); "humor that is touched with cross-lights of pathos" (De Quincey); "Humor is wit appertaining to character, and indulges in breadth of drollery rather than in play and brilliancy of point" (Landor). See WITTY, JEST, JOCULAR, LAUGHABLE.
The genius of the Spanish people is exquisitely subtle, without being at all acute; hence there is so much humor and so little wit in their literature. The genius of the Italians is acute . . . but not subtle; hence, what they think to be humorous is merely witty. Coleridge.
at one's wit's end, in a dilemma; at the limit of one's mental resource.

wit'an (wĭt'ăn), n. pl. [AS., pl. of wita sage, councilor.] Lit., wise men; specif., A.-S. Hist., the members of the national, or king's, council which sat to assist the king in administrative and judicial matters; also, the council.

witch (wĭch), n. [ME. wicche, AS. wicce, fem., wicca, masc.; cf. Fries. wikke a witch, LG. wikken to predict, Icel. vitki a wizard, vitka to bewitch; perh. akin to E. WICKED.] 1. One who practices the black art, or magic; one regarded as possessing supernatural or magical power by compact with an evil spirit, esp. with the Devil; a sorcerer or sorceress; — now applied chiefly or only to women.
There was a man in that city whose name was Simon, a witch. Wyclife (Acts viii. 9).
In the Hexenhammer [Witch Hammer], the idea of witchcraft is systematically determined. Witches, sorcerers, and sorceresses, are people who deny God, and renounce him and his grace; who have made a league with the Devil; have given themselves up to him body and soul; who attend his assemblies and sabbaths, and receive from him poison powder, and, as his subjects, receive command from him to injure and destroy men and animals; who, through devilish arts, stir up storms, damage the corn, the meadows, and the fields, and confound the powers of nature. Howitt (Ennemoser).
2. An ugly old woman; a hag; crone. Shak.
3. One who exercises more than common power of attraction; a charming or bewitching person; also, one given to mischief; — said esp. of a woman or child. Colloq.

Hist.* 1. A series of anonymous critical essays on the gospel history, written from a purely deistical standpoint and published by Lessing in Brunswick between 1773 and 1781, in 3 vols. The author is now known to have been one Hermann Samuel Reimarus (1694–1768), who was the director of the Hamburg gymnasium.

2. The portions of a New Testament palimpsest of the Gospels, preserved at Wolfenbüttel, deciphered about 1750.

Wolff'i-a (wŏl'fĭ-ȧ; wō'lf-), n. [NL., after J. F. Wolff (1778–1806), German physician and botanist.] Bot. A genus of widely distributed lemnaceous plants distinguished from Lemna by the one-celled anthers and the absence of roots. They are the smallest flowering plants known, consisting merely of a minute ovoid or globose leafless thallus, producing the flowers from clefts or grooves.

Wolff'i-an (wō'lf'fĭ-ăn), a. Anat. Discovered, or first described, by Caspar Friedrich Wolff (1733–1794), the founder of modern embryology.

Wolffian body, Embryol., the mesonephros of a vertebrate embryo; one of a pair of functional renal organs found in most vertebrate embryos, and becoming the kidneys in fishes and amphibians. It consists originally of a few nephridial tubules (Wolffian tubules) situated behind the pronephros and opening into a duct (Wolffian duct) that joins the posterior end of the intestine (see KIDNEY, 1). The Wolffian duct becomes the ureter in female elasmobranchs and amphibians and in male and female teleost fishes, but atrophies in female reptiles, birds, and mammals. In male elasmobranchs and amphibians it becomes a urinogenital duct; in males of higher vertebrates it serves, after degeneration of the mesonephros, only as a sperm duct (vas deferens).

2. The hard fibrous substance which makes up the greater part of the stems and branches of trees or shrubs beneath the bark and is found to a limited extent in herbaceous plants. Wood consists technically of the aggregated tougher portions or xylem elements of the vascular bundles, intersected (in dicotyledonous plants) with the medullary rays, which constitute the so-called silver grain. It is formed through the activity of the cambium (which see), the tissue developed in spring being composed of larger cells than that of autumn. The older more central portion of the wood of a tree (heartwood, or duramen) is often of a different color and texture from that of the younger external layers (sapwood, or alburnum). With the exception of the larger bamboos and palms, the monocotyledons produce very little wood. Chemically wood is chiefly carbohydrates of the group of lignocelluloses, with a little of inorganic substances, as potash, etc.

3. Timber or lumber; the trunks or large branches of trees sawed or otherwise prepared for commercial use. Wood is popularly classed as hard or soft according to its texture and weight, oak being typical of the former and white pine of the latter; but in the lumber trade all coniferous trees are called soft woods and all broad-leaved or dicotyledonous trees hard woods, notwithstanding the fact that some conifers have exceedingly hard wood, while the wood of the tulip tree is as soft as white pine.

cated sheep and some other animals; esp., that of sheep, which constitutes, next to cotton, the most important material of clothing. Wool proper is borne by wild species of sheep only as a short undercoat concealed by hair, and its development in domesticated sheep is due to long-continued selective breeding. It is distinguished from hair by the character of its covering of minute overlapping scales or plates, to which is due its felting property. There are imperceptible gradations between hair and wool, however, and neglected wool-bearing animals tend to produce an increasing amount of hair. Wool, like hair, is an outgrowth of the epidermis and consists essentially of keratin, and in its natural state contains fatty matter called yolk or suint (which see). Its quality has been greatly improved by careful breeding and crossing of fine-wooled with long-wooled breeds. Wool from different parts of the body differs greatly in length of fiber, fineness, and structure. Wools are variously graded, as on the basis of length of staple, fineness, luster, elasticity, color, etc. The three main classes on the basis of staple are: (1) carding, or clothing, wools, or those of the Merino type, in which felting qualities are desired; (2) combing wools, in which length of staple is required; and (3) miscellaneous wools, long, strong, coarse wools used for carpets, blankets, and coarse clothing, and sometimes called carpet, or blanket, wools.

2. Short, thick hair, esp. when crisped or curled.

wootz (wo͞otz), n., wootz steel. [Perh. a corruption of Kanarese ukku steel.] A species of steel made in India in a rude way in small crucibles; India, or Indian, steel. It has a high temper and is suitable for edge tools. The process is the oldest known for making fused steel.

word (wûrd), n. [AS. word; akin to OFries. & OS. word, D. woord, G. wort, Icel. orð, Sw. & Dan. ord, Goth waúrd, OPruss. wirds, Lith. vardas a name, L. verbum a word, and prob. to Gr. ῥητωρ an orator. Cf. RHETORIC, VERB.] 1. That which is said; esp., a brief remark or expression; as, a word of advice.

All the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Gal. v. 14.

2. An utterance considered as implying the faith or authority of the person who utters it; statement; affirmation; declaration; promise. "Keep thy word justly." Shak.

3. A saying or proverb; adage; maxim; motto. Archaic.

The device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Ethiope reaching at the sun:
The word, "Lux tua vita mihi." Shak.

4. Account; tidings; report; message; also, communication; information; — used only in the singular.

I pray you . . . bring me word thither
How the world goes Shak.

5. Fame; report; repute; talk. Obs. or Archaic.

6. A password, watchword, or verbal signal; also, an order; command; direction; as, to give the word.

7. Talk; discourse; speech; language; — chiefly in pl.

Be thy words severe;
Sharp as he merits, but the sword forbear Dryden.

8. pl. Verbal contention; dispute.

Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me Shak.

9. An articulate sound or combination of sounds which, as symbolizing an idea, is taken as an ultimate independent unit of discourse; the smallest particle of speech that has meaning when taken by itself. Thus the combination of vocal sounds clouds disappear, though expressing a logical unit (a judgment), is not an ultimate sense unit, since it is analyzable into two independent terms; while the -s of clouds and the dis- of disappear, though ultimate sense units, are not independent units, since they have their sense only in combination; and the phonetic units (syllables) -ap and -pear are not units of sense at all: hence clouds and disappear are the only units here that have all the characteristics of words. A word may be: as to its origin, cloud, run, white), or derivative (as cloudy, cloudiness); as to its form, inflectional (as clouds, walked), and either simple or compound, as man, manservant. Words are presentational when they present ideas as terms of thought (as cloud, run, white), and relational when they express the relationships between the terms of thought (as of, shall, to). In an inflected language those forms of a given base which constitute a particular part of speech (noun, verb, etc.) are regarded not as different words, but as forms of the same word, which in this sense is a grammatical abstraction by which the idea denoted in common by these forms is conceived apart from any context, although in actual speech no word form for the idea so conceived may exist; thus, mans, manning, manned are regarded as forms of the verb man; man's, men, men's as forms of another word, the noun man. So, in Latin, hominis, hominem, etc., are viewed as forms of the same word, although their base homin- does not exist as a word.

Amongst men who confound their ideas with words, there must be endless disputes. Locke.

10. Hence, the written or printed character, or combination of characters, expressing such a unit of discourse; as, the words on a page.

11. Theol. = the Word, below.

wres'tling (-lĭng), n. Act of one who wrestles; specif., the sport consisting of the hand-to-hand combat between two unarmed contestants who seek to throw each other. The various styles of wrestling differ in their definition of a fall and in the governing rules. In Greco-Roman wrestling, tripping and taking hold of the legs are forbidden, and a fall is gained (that is, the bout is won) by the contestant who pins both his opponent's shoulders to the ground. In catch-as-catch-can wrestling, all holds are permitted except such as may be barred by mutual consent, and a fall is defined as in Greco-Roman style For description of the holds or chips, etc., used in these styles, see FULL NELSON; HALF NELSON; HAMMER LOCK; SCISSORS, 2; HEAD SPIN; BRIDGE, 5 n. Lancashire style wrestling is essentially the same as catch-as-catch-can. In Cumberland and Westmorland wrestling the contestants stand chest to chest, grasping each other around the body. The one first losing his hold, or touching the ground with any part of his body except his feet, loses the bout. If both fall to the ground at the same time, it is a dog-fall, and must be wrestled over. In the Cornwall and Devon wrestling, the wrestlers compete in strong loose linen jackets, catching hold of the jacket, or anywhere above the waist. Two shoulders and one hip, or two hips and one shoulder, must touch the ground to constitute a fall, and if a man is thrown otherwise than on his back the contestants get upon their feet and the bout recommences. See also JUJUTSU.

writ (rĭt), n. [AS. writ, gewrit. See WRITE.] 1. That which is written; writing; a written document; scripture; — now rare except as applied, with sacred or holy, to the Bible; as, sacred writ. "Holy Writ." Milton.

Then to his hands that writ he did betake, Which he disclosing read, thus as the paper spake. Spenser.

2. Law. Orig., in English law, any of various instruments in epistolary form issued under seal in the king's name, being either an original writ (one issued under the great seal to institute an action) or a judicial writ (one issued by a court under its own seal for summoning juries, coercing litigants, enforcing judgments, etc.); hence, in general, an order or mandatory process in writing, under seal, issued, in the name of the sovereign or in the name of a court or judicial officer, from the proper authority, commanding the performance or nonperformance of some act by the person to whom it is directed. Under various penal codes in the United States a writ is defined as "any order or precept in writing issued in the name of the State or of a court or judicial officer." The original writ of English law contained a short statement of the facts complained of, and directed the sheriff to command the defendant to satisfy the plaintiff's claim or to appear and answer his complaint in court. The circumstances under which a writ would be issued became fixed, and this limited the nature of actions by which relief could be obtained, and no action could be begun in the king's court, and no action affecting freehold could be begun anywhere, except by an original writ. To remedy this the Statute of Westminster II. enacted that existing writs should issue for injuries or wrongs of a similar nature (L., in consimili casu) to those expressly provided for in existing writs. This gave rise to the system of fictions which became characteristic of common-law pleading, in both English and American practice. The only important writs developed after the time of Henry III. were that of trespass and its offshoots, ejectment, case, assumpsit, and trover, all being framed under statutory authority. The use of original writs is now discontinued, but the statutory summons, sometimes called writ of summons, by which actions are now begun in practically all jurisdictions, is sometimes erroneously called an original writ. Writs are usually witnessed, or tested, in the name of the chief justice or principal judge of the court out of which they are issued; and those directed to a sheriff, or other ministerial officer, require him to return them on a day specified. Writs are variously named; as: the writ of account, writ of aiel, writ of covenant, writ of detinue, etc., from the action in which they were used (see ACCOUNT, n., 7; AIEL, 2; COVENANT, n., 5 b; DETINUE b, etc.); the writ of dower, writ of entry, writ of possession, etc., from the right to enforce which they are used; the writ of execution, writ of inhibition, etc., from the nature of the command contained in them; the writ of spoliation, from the wrong it aims to redress, etc. writ in the course of PROGRESS, n. 4. — w. of consultation, Law, a writ by which a cause, improperly removed by prohibition from one court to another, is returned to the court from which it came; — so called because the judges, on consultation, find the prohibition ill-founded. — w. of cosinage. See COSINAGE. — w. of error, Law, a writ, orig. in English law an original writ, which lies in a competent court after judgment in an action at law in a court of record, directing the latter to examine the record, or, more commonly, to remit the record to an appellate court in order that some alleged error in the proceedings or in the judgment of the court may be corrected, if it exists. Appeal has now generally superseded the proceeding by writ of error. — w. of extent. See EXTENT, 3. — w. of inquiry, a writ issued in certain actions at law, where the defendant has suffered judg-

See Guide to Pron., § 259. The form and value of X are from the Latin X, which is from the Greek X, which in some Greek alphabets had the value of ks, the k being perhaps aspirated in classic Greek (cf. Χι). See ALPHABET, Illust. The name eks is also from Latin ix (rarely ex), perh. through French ixe, the vowel being accommodated to that in other letter names beginning with e (as those of f, l, s, etc.).
2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate: a The twenty-first in a series. b [cap.] Chem. Xenon. c [cap.] Christ; — properly, the Greek letter Chi, which in form is like X. X is also used for Christian; as, X Science. d [l. c.] Math. (1) An unknown quantity. X was used as an abbreviation for Ar. shei a thing, something, which, in the Middle Ages, was used to designate the unknown, and was then prevailingly transcribed as xei. (2) The abscissa in the rectilinear coördinate system. e Elec. Reactance.
3. As a Roman numeral, X stands for 10, ⋈ for 1,000, and X for 10,000.
4. As an abbreviation, in the form X.: a Various proper names, as Xavier, Xerxes, etc. b Ex coupon; ex dividend; ex interest; (see EX, prep.); — used on the tape of stock tickers.

X, or x, n.; pl. X's or Xs (ĕk'sĕz; -sĭz). 1. The letter X, x, or its sound.
2. Something shaped like the letter X.
3. [cap.] Wireless Teleg. A disturbing electromagnet wave due to atmospheric electricity. A device for sifting out these waves to prevent them from influencing the receiver is called an X stopper.

X, a. Having the general shape of the (capital) letter X.

X rays, or X'-rays' (-rāz'), n. pl. The Röntgen rays; — so called by their discoverer because of their enigmatical character (cf. X, the letter, 2 d (1)). — X'-ray' tube, Physics, a vacuum tube suitable for producing Röntgen rays.

xan'thate (zăn'thāt), n. [See XANTHIC.] Chem. A salt or ester of xanthic acid.

xan'the-in (zăn'thē-ĭn), n. [Gr. ξανθός yellow.] Chem. A yellow coloring matter found in yellow flowers, as in the sunflower. It resembles xanthin, but is soluble in water.

xan'thene (-thēn), n. Chem. A solid, $C_6H_4{<}^{CH_2}_{O}{>}C_6H_4$, got by reduction of xanthone.

Xan'thi-an (-thĭ-ăn), a. Of or pert. to Xanthus, an ancient town of Asia Minor; — applied esp. to certain marbles found near that place, and now in the British Museum.

xan'thic (zăn'thĭk), a. [Gr. ξανθός yellow: cf. F. xanthique.] 1. Pertaining to, or tending toward, a yellow color; specif., Bot., designating flowers with some tint of yellow. See CYANIC, 2.
2. Chem. a Of or pert. to xanthin or xanthine. b Noting, or pert. to, an acid, $C_2H_5OCS{\cdot}SH$, got as a heavy colorless oil of pungent odor by stirring a hot alcoholic solution of caustic potash with carbon disulphide and treating the product with hydrochloric acid; xanthogenic. Its salts, the xanthates, form a yellow precipitate with cuprous salts.

xan'thin (-thĭn), n. [Gr. ξανθός yellow.] Chem. a A yellow insoluble coloring matter extracted from yellow flowers. b A yellow coloring matter found in madder. c Xanthine. d One of the gaseous or volatile decomposition products of the xanthates, prob. identical with carbon disulphide. Obs.

xan'thine (zăn'thĭn; -thēn; 184), n. Also xan'thin. [Gr. ξανθός yellow.] Physiol. Chem. A white microcrystalline nitrogenous compound, $C_5H_4O_2N_4$, present in muscle tissue, in the liver, spleen, pancreas, and other organs, and also in urine (in small quantities) and some urinary calculi, and in the juices of certain plants; — so called because it leaves a yellow residue when evaporated to dryness with nitric acid. Xanthine is closely related to uric acid, being the 2,6-dioxy derivative of purine.

xan'thi-nu'ri-a (zăn'thĭ-nū'rĭ-ă), n. Also xanthiuria, xanthuria. [NL.; xanthine + -uria.] Med. The presence of an excess of xanthine in the urine.

Xan-thip'pe (zăn-thĭp'ē; -tĭp'ē) or Xan-tip'pe (-tĭp'ē), n. Socrates's wife, whose peevish scolding and quarrelsome temper have become proverbial.

Xan'thi-um (zăn'thĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξάνθιον a plant used to dye the hair yellow, ξανθός yellow.] Bot. A genus of coarse rough or spiny ambrosiaceous plants having small heads of greenish flowers, the pistillate inclosed in an involucre which becomes a burr covered with hooked spines or bristles. The species are known as cockleburs or clotburs. xantho-. Combining form fr. Gr. ξανθός, yellow; — used specif., Chem., in naming members of a series of complex yellow or brownish yellow ammoniacal cobalt salts; as, xanthocobaltic chloride, $Co_2(NH_3)_{10}(NO_3)_2Cl_4$.

Xan-thoch'ro-i (zăn-thŏk'rō-ī), n. pl. [NL.; xantho- + Gr. χρόα color.] Ethnol. A division of the Caucasian races, including chiefly the fair whites of northern Europe and their descendants. See CAUCASIAN, a., 2. — Xan'tho-chro'ic (zăn'thō-krō'ĭk), a.

xan'tho-chroid (zăn'thō-kroid), a. [See XANTHOCHROI; -OID.] Ethnol. Having a yellowish or fair complexion. — n. A person having xanthochroid traits.

xan-thoch'ro-ism (zăn-thŏk'rō-ĭz'm), n. Abnormal coloration of feathers in which yellow replaces the normal color, as in certain parrots. It is commonly due to the absence of the dark pigment which with yellow forms green.

xan'tho-chro'mi-a (zăn'thō-krō'mĭ-ă), n. [NL.; xantho- + -chrome + -ia.] Med. Yellowish discoloration, as of the skin; specif., the yellowish discoloration of the cerebrospinal fluid, diagnostic of hemorrhage of the spinal cord.

xan'tho-cre-at'i-nine (-krē-ăt'ĭ-nĭn; -nēn; 184), n. Also -nin. [xantho- + creatinine.] Physiol. Chem. A yellow crystalline leucomaine, $C_7H_{10}ON_4$, present in small quantity in muscle tissue. It is poisonous, and in general properties resembles creatinine.

xan'tho-der'ma (-dûr'mă), n. [NL. See XANTHO-; DERMA.] Med. Yellow discoloration of the skin; xanthochroia.

xan'tho-dont (zăn'thō-dŏnt), a. [xantho- + -odont.] Having yellow teeth, esp. incisors; as, xanthodont rodents.

xan'tho-don'tous (-dŏn'tŭs), a. Having yellow teeth.

xe'bec (zē'bĕk), n. [Sp. jabeque, formerly spelt xabeque, or Pg. xabeco ; cf. F. chebec, chabec, It. sciabecco, zambecco ; orig uncert.] Naut. A Mediterranean vessel, with long overhanging bow and stern, usually three-masted, lateen-rigged, but often carrying square sails on the foremast. Xebecs were formerly often used as corsairs.

Xe-nar'thra (zē-năr'thrȧ), n. [NL. ; xeno- + Gr. ἄρθρον joint.] Zoöl. A mammalian suborder of the American edentates (anteaters, sloths, and armadillos) characterized by additional articular facets on the dorsolumbar vertebræ. Cf. NOMARTHRA. — xe-nar'thral (-thrăl), a.

xe'ni-a (zē'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. G. xenien, pl., gifts of friendship, Gr. ξενια, prop. neut. pl. of ξενιος hospitable.] Bot. & Hort. The direct influence of pollen upon the seed in the cross-pollination of certain cultivated plants, whereby hybrid characters are not confined to the embryo as in normal cross-fertilization, but are manifested in the form, color, etc., of the fruit or seed in the same generation. Xenia is thus a hereditary phenomenon analogous to telegony (which see). It is commonly observed in Indian corn, or maize, as when a yellow-seeded variety pollinated by a blue-seeded one yields ears with some blue kernels.

xe'ni-al (-ăl), a. [Gr. ξενιος pertaining to hospitality, fr. ξένος guest.] Of, pert. to, or designating, hospitality or relations between host and guest, esp. among the ancient Greeks ; as, xenial relationship ; xenial customs.

xe'ni-um (-ŭm), n. ; L. pl. XENIA (-ȧ). [L., fr. Gr. ξενιον gift to a guest, fr. ξενος guest.] Class. Antiq. A present given to a guest or stranger, or to a foreign ambassador.

xeno-, xen-. Combining form fr. Gr. ξενος, strange, foreign.

Xe-noc'ra-te'an (zē-nŏk'rȧ-tē'ăn) a. Like, or pertaining to Xen'o-crat'ic (zĕn'ō-krăt'ĭk) } to, the doctrine of the Greek philosopher Xenocrates (396–314 B. C.), in the Old Academy the second scholarch after Plato. He combined Pythagorean conceptions with Platonism. See ACADEMY, 1.

xen'o-do-chi'um (zĕn'ō-dō-kĭ'ŭm), n. ; L. pl. -CHIA (-ȧ). [L., a building for the reception of strangers, Gr. ξενοδοχεῖον.] a Antiq. A public building for the reception of strangers ; a caravansary. b In the Middle Ages, a room in a monastery for the reception and entertainment of strangers and pilgrims, and for the relief of paupers.

xe-nog'a-my (zē-nŏg'ȧ-mĭ), n. [xeno- + -gamy.] Bot. Cross-fertilization. — xe-nog'a-mous (-mŭs), a.

xen'o-me'ni-a (-mē'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. ; xeno- + catamenia.] Med. Vicarious menstruation (which see).

xen'o-mor'phic (-môr'fĭk), a. [xeno- + -morphic.] Petrog. Having a form other than its own ; — said of mineral grains of igneous rocks whose mutual growths have prevented the assumption of outward crystal form ; allotriomorphic ; — contrasted with idiomorphic or automorphic.

xen'on (zĕn'ŏn ; zē'nŏn), n. [Gr. ξένον, neut. of ξενος strange.] Chem. A very heavy, inert gaseous element occurring in the atmosphere in the proportion of one volume in about 20 millions. It was discovered by Ramsay and Travers in 1898. It can be condensed to a liquid boiling at −109° C., and to a solid which volatilizes without melting. Symbol, Xe or X ; at. wt., 130.2.

Xen'o-rhyn'chus (zĕn'ō-rĭn'kŭs), n. [NL. ; Gr. ξενος strange + ῥύγχος beak.] Zoöl. The genus of African storks including the saddle-billed stork.

Xen'o-sau'ri-dæ (-sô'rĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL. ; Gr. ξενος strange + σαύρα, σαῦρος, lizard + -idæ.] Zoöl. A family of lizards, regarded as intermediate between the Iguanidæ and Anguidæ, consisting of the genus Xen'o-sau'rus. X. grandis, of southern Mexico, the only species, has a rather slender, depressed body, covered above with minute tubercles and granules, and becomes about a foot long. — xen'o-sau'rid (-rĭd), n. — xen'o-sau'roid (-roid), a. & n.

xen'o-time (zĕn'ō-tīm), n. [F. xénotime ; cf. Gr. ξενος strange, stranger, and τιμή honor. The crystals are small and rare, and were long unnoticed.] Min. A mineral occurring in tetragonal crystals and rolled grains, usually brown or yellow, and consisting essentially of yttrium phosphate, YPO_4. Thorium, erbium, cerium, etc., may also be present. H., 4–5. Sp. gr., 4.45–4.56.

xen'yl (zĕn'ĭl ; zē'nĭl), n. [xeno- + -yl.] Org. Chem. A univalent radical, C_8H_9, C_6H_4 ; as, xenylamine, a crystalline compound called also para-aminobiphenyl. xe-ra'si-a (zē-rā'zhĭ-ȧ ; -sĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξηρασια dryness, fr. ξηραίνειν to dry.] Med. A disease of the hair, characterized by cessation of growth and excessive dryness with a dusty appearance.

xe'ro- (zē'rō-). Combining form from Greek ξηρός, dry.

xe'ro-der'ma (-dûr'mȧ), n. [NL. ; xero- + Gr. δέρμα skin.] Med. A disease of the skin, characterized by dryness and roughness, esp. one causing a dull grayish, yellowish, or dirt-colored discoloration and a fine scaly desquamation. Some regard it as a mild ichthyosis.

xe-ron'ic (zē-rŏn'ĭk), a. [Gr. ξηρός dry + citraconic.] Chem. Designating, or pert. to, an acid, $C_6H_8O_4$, obtained in the form of its anhydride by continued boiling of citraconic anhydride. It is the diethyl derivative of maleic acid.

xe-roph'a-gy (zē-rŏf'ȧ-jĭ), n. [L. xerophagia, Gr. ξηροφαγία ; ξηρος dry + φαγειν to eat.] The living on a diet of dry food, esp. practiced among the primitive Christians in Lent and on other fasts.

xe-roph'i-lous (-fĭ-lŭs), a. [xero- + -philous.] Bot. Drought-loving ; able to withstand the absence or scarcity of moisture, as desert plants. — xe-roph'i-ly (-fĭ), n.

xe'roph-thal'mi-a (zē'rŏf-thăl'mĭ-ȧ), n. [L., fr. Gr. ξηροφθαλμία ; ξηρός dry + ὀφθαλμός the eye. See OPHTHALMIA.] Med. An abnormal dryness of the eyeball produced usually by long-continued inflammation and subsequent atrophy of the conjunctiva.

Xe'ro-phyl'lum (zē'rō-fĭl'ŭm), n. [NL. ; xero- + Gr. φύλλον leaf.] Bot. A genus of tall North American melanthaceous herbs, the turkey beards, having thick woody rootstocks, simple stems with rough-edged linear leaves, and small white flowers in a dense terminal raceme.

xe'ro-phyte (zē'rō-fīt), n. [xero- + -phyte.] Bot. A xerophilous plant ; a plant structurally adapted for growth with a limited water supply. The term is generally applied not only to actual desert or drought plants, but to those inhabiting salt marshes or alkaline soils, where the imbibition of water through the roots is slow or difficult because of the excess of salts in solution (cf. HALOPHYTE). Xerophytes exhibit many modifications of structure designed to limit transpiration, as a thickened epidermis, waxy or resinous coatings, dense pubescence, copious aqueous tissue, etc. Cf. HYDROPHYTE, MESOPHYTE. — xe'ro-phyt'ic (-fĭt'ĭk), a. — xe'ro-phyt'ism (zē'rō-fī-tĭz'm), n.

xe-ro'sis (zē-rō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξήρωσις, fr. ξηρος dry.] Med. Abnormal dryness, as of the skin or eye.

xe-rot'ic (zē-rŏt'ĭk), a. [See XEROSIS.] Med. Dry.

xe'ro-trip'sis (zē'rō-trĭp'sĭs), n. [NL. ; xero- + Gr. τρῖψις a rubbing.] Med. Dry friction.

xi (zī ; ksē), n. [Gr. ξι.] The fourteenth letter (Ξ, ξ) of the Greek alphabet, equivalent to English x or z. In classic Greek it represents the sound of ks, as in tacks, the k being perhaps aspirated. Cf. X.

Xi-me'ni-a (zi-mē'nĭ-ȧ), n. [After F. Ximenes, Spanish missionary in Mexico, who in 1615 published a book on American medicinal plants.] Bot. A small genus of olacaceous shrubs or trees of wide distribution, characterized by the persistent calyx, bearded petals, and drupaceous fruit. X. americana is the mountain plum, or wild lime.

Xiph'a-gros'tis (zĭf'ȧ-grŏs'tĭs), n. [NL. ; Gr. ξίφος sword + ἄγρωστις a kind of grass.] Bot. A small genus of tall perennial Asiatic grasses much resembling sugar cane, having ample fan-shaped feathery panicles. X. sinensis is commonly cultivated under the name eulalia.

Xiph'i-as (zĭf'ĭ-ăs), n. [L., swordfish, sword-shaped comet, Gr. ξιφίας, fr. ξίφος sword.] 1. Zoöl. A genus of fishes comprising the common swordfish and constituting the family Xi-phi'i-dæ (zĭ-fĭ'ĭ-dē). See SWORDFISH, 1 a. — xiph'i-i-form' (zĭf'ĭ-ĭ-fôrm'), a. — xiph'i-oid (-oid), a. & n. 2. Astron. a The constellation Dorado. b [l. c.] A comet shaped like a sword. Obs.

xiph'i-plas'tral (zĭf'ĭ-plăs'trăl), a. Zoöl. Pertaining to the xiphiplastron. — n. = XIPHIPLASTRON.

xiph'i-plas'tron (zĭf'ĭ-plăs'trŏn), n. ; L. pl. -PLASTRA (-trȧ). [NL. ; Gr. ξίφος a sword + plastron.] Zoöl. The posterior, or fourth, lateral plate in the plastron of turtles.

xiph'i-ster'num (-stûr'nŭm), n. ; L. pl. XIPHISTERNA (-nȧ). [NL. ; Gr. ξιφος a sword + sternum.] a Anat. & Zoöl. The posterior segment, or extremity, of the sternum ; — in man usually called xiphoid, or ensiform, process. b Zoöl. = XIPHIPLASTRON. — xiph'i-ster'nal (zĭf'ĭ-stûr'năl), a.

Yk), a. Chem. β-thiocarbamic. See THIOCARBAMIC.

xan'tho-gen-ate (zăn'thō-jĕn-āt), n. Chem. A xanthate.

xan'tho-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. [See XANTHO- ; -GEN.] Chem. Xanthic. See XANTHIC, 2 b.

xan-thop'a-thy (zăn-thŏp'ȧ-thĭ), n. Also xan'tho-path'i-a (zăn'thō-păth'ĭ-ȧ). [NL. xanthopathia. See XANTHO- ; -PATHY.] Med. Xanthoderma.

xan'tho-phyl (zăn'thō-fĭl). Var. of XANTHOPHYLL.

xan'tho-pic'rite (-pĭk'rīt), xan'tho-pic'rine (-rĭn ; -rēn ; 184), or -rin, n. [xantho- + Gr. πικρός bitter.] Berberine.

xan'tho-pous (zăn'thō-pŭs), a. [xantho- + Gr. πούς, ποδός, foot.] Bot. Having a yellow stipe, or stem. Rare.

xan'tho-pur'pu-rin (zăn'thō-pûr'pū-rĭn), n. = PURPURO-XANTHIN.

Xan'tho-rhi'za (-rī'zȧ). Xan'thor-rhi'za. Vars. of XANTHORHIZA.

Xan'tho-rhœ'a (-rē'ȧ), n. [NL.] Syn. of XANTHORRHŒA.

xan'tho-sid'er-ite (-sĭd'ēr-īt), n. [xantho- + siderite.] Min. A hydrous ferric oxide, $Fe_2O_3 \cdot 2H_2O$, yellowish or brownish and in fine needles or earthy.

xan'tho-sper'mous (-spûr'mŭs), a. [xantho- + -spermous.] Bot. Having yellow seeds.

xan-thox'y-lin (zăn-thŏk'sĭ-lĭn), n. [See XANTHOXYLUM.] Chem. A crystalline compound, $C_{11}H_{12}O_3$, got from seeds of a Japanese prickly ash.

Xan-thox'y-lum (-lŭm), n. [NL. ; xantho- + Gr. ξύλον wood.] Syn. of ZANTHOXYLUM.

xan-thu'ri-a (-thū'rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Xanthinuria.

Xan-tip'pe, n. See XANTHIPPE.

xa-raf'fes. + SHROFF xarafin + XERAFIN.

xa-rī'fo (shä-rē'fō). + SHEREEF

X-c., or X-cp. Abbr. Ex coupon (see EX, prep a).

xcut. Abbr. Crosscut. n. & v.

X-div. Abbr. Ex dividend (see EX, prep. a).

Xe. Abbr. Chem. [no period, Xe]. Xenon.

Xe'ma (zē'mȧ), n. [NL.] Zoöl. A genus of small black-headed gulls of Arctic America having a slightly forked tail. There is but one species (X. sabinei).

Xen. Abbr. Xenophon.

Xen'a-can-thi'ni (zē-năk'ȧ-thī'nī), n. pl. [NL. ; xeno- + Gr. ἄκανθα thorn.] Paleon A division of fossil elasmobranchs, practically equiv. to Ichthyotomi. — xen'a-can'thine (-kăn'thĭn ; -thĭn : 184), a. & n.

xe-nar'throus (zē-năr'thrŭs), a. Xenarthral.

Xen'e-la'si-a (zĕn'ē-lā'zhĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr Gr. ξενηλασία expulsion of strangers.] Gr. Antiq A Spartan law prohibiting strangers from settling in Sparta xe'ni-an (zē'nĭ-ăn), a. Xenial.

Xe-nic'i-dæ (zē-nĭs'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. generic name Xenicus, fr. Gr. ξενικός foreign.] Zoöl. The family of passerine New Zealand birds including the rifleman bird and the bush wren. The typical genus is Xen'i-cus (zĕn'ĭ-kŭs).

xen'o-derm (zē'nō-dûrm), n. [xeno- + -derm.] A wart snake.

Xen'o-der'ma-tī'næ (-dûr'mȧ-tī'nē), n. pl. [NL., fr. the specific name xenodermus. Gr. ξένος strange + δέρμα skin ; — from its scaly back.] Zoöl. The subfamily in which the wart snakes are often placed.

xen'o-do-che'ion (-dō-kē'yŏn ; -kī'ŏn), xen'o-do-che'um (-kē'ŭm), = SHROFF xe-nod'o-chy (zē-nŏd'ō-kĭ), n. [Gr ξενοδοχία.] a Reception of strangers ; hospitality. b = XENODOCHIUM. — xen'o-do-chi'al (zĕn'ō-dō-kī'ăl), a. Both R. xe-nog'e-ny (zē-nŏj'ē-nĭ), n. = XENOGENESIS.

xen'o-lite (zĕn'ō-līt), n. [Sw xenolit, fr. Gr ξενος stranger + λιθος stone ; — because it was a stranger in the place where it was found.] An aluminium silicate, prob. identical with sillimanite. Cf. FIBROLITE.

xen'o-ma'ni-a (-mā'nĭ-ȧ), n. [xeno- + mania.] A mania for, or an inordinate attachment to, foreign customs, institutions, manners, fashions, etc. Rare.

Xen'o-mi (zē'nō-mī), n. pl. [NL. ; xeno- + Gr. μορφή form.] Zoöl. Syn. of TARDIGRADA, 2.

xen'o-mor'pho-sis (-môr'fō-sĭs), n. [NL. ; xeno- + Gr. μορφωσις form.] = HETEROMORPHOSIS.

Xen'o-pel'ta-dæ (-pĕl'tȧ-dē), n. pl. [NL. ; xeno- + Gr. πέλτη shield.] Zoöl. A family of harmless snakes intermediate in many respects between the boas and the colubrine or natricine snakes. The only species, Xenopeltis unicolor, of southeastern Asia and the Malay Archipelago, grows about three feet long and has smooth black or brown iridescent scales. — xen'o-pel'tid (-tĭd), a. & n.

Xe-noph'a-ne'an (zē-nŏf'ȧ-nē'ăn), a. Like, or pert. to, the doctrines of the Eleatic philosopher Xenophanes (born about 570 B. C.), noteworthy for his emphatic (perhaps pantheistic) monotheism xen'o-pho'bi-a (zĕn'ō-fō'bĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. ; xeno- + -phobia.] Hatred of foreigners. Rare.

Xen'o-phon'tic (zē'nō-fŏn'tĭk), a. Of or pert. to Xenophon. Rare.

Xe-noph'o-ra (zē-nŏf'ō-rȧ), n. [NL. See XENO ; -PHOROUS.] See CARRIER SHELL.

xe'no-ph'thal'mi-a (zē'nŏf-thăl'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL ; xeno- + ophthalmia.] Conjunctivitis due to a foreign body in the eye Xen'o-pi'cus (zĕn'ō-pī'kŭs), n. [NL., fr. the specific name xenopicus, fr. Gr. ξένος strange + L. picus woodpecker.] Zoöl. The genus constituted by the white-headed woodpecker.

Xen'o-pod'i-dæ (-pŏd'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. A family constituted by Xenopus — xen'o-po'did (zĕn'ō-pō'dĭd), n. — xen'o-po'doid (-doid), a. & n.

Xe-nop'ter-yg'i-i (zē-nŏp'tĕr-ĭj'ĭ-ī), n. pl. [NL ; xeno- + Gr πτερον wing (taken to mean fin), or πτέρυξ wing, fin.] Zoöl. See GOBIESOCIDÆ. — xe-nop'ter-yan (-nŏp'tĕr-ĭăn), xe-nop'ter-yg'i-an (-tĭj'ĭ-ăn), a. & n.

Xen'o-pus (zĕn'ō-pŭs), n. [NL. ; xeno- + Gr. πους foot.] Zoöl. A genus of African aglossate toads, having teeth in the upper jaw, tentacle-like processes on the sides of the head, and broadly webbed hind feet with claw-like nails on the first three toes.

Xe'nos (zē'nŏs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξένος strange.] See STREPSIPTERA.

Xe-nu'rus (zē-nū'rŭs), n. [NL. ; xeno- + Gr. οὐρά tail.] Zoöl. A genus of armadillos having twelve or thirteen movable plates on the middle of the body, as the tatouay. In recent classifications, called Cabassous.

xe'ny (zē'nĭ). Var. of XENIA.

xe'nyl-am'ine (zē'nĭl-ăm'ĭn ; *-ā-*mēn' ; 184), n. Also -in. [Gr. ξένος strange (to recall its obscure origin) + diphenylamine.] A colorless crystalline compound, $C_{12}H_{11}C_6H_4NH_2$, the paraamino derivative of diphenyl.

xeque. + SHEIK.

xer'a-fin (zĕr'ȧ-fĭn ; Pg. shĕr'ȧ-fēn'), n. Also xer'a-fim, xer'a-phim, etc. [Pg. xerafim, fr. Ar. See SHERIFF, a coin.] A silver coin formerly current in Goa, India, worth 300–360 reis (30–36 cents, ls. 3d.–ls. 6d.) ; also, a mohur. Obs.

xe-ran'sis (zē-răn'sĭs), n. [NL. ; fr. Gr. ξήρανσις a drying.] Med. Drying up ; desiccation.

xe-ran'tic (-tĭk), a [Gr. ξηραντικός.] Drying up ; desiccative.

xer'es (zĕr'ēz ; formerly in Sp. shĕr'ās), n. Sherry (which see) xe-riff' (zhē-rēf'). Var. of SHERIFF (the coin).

xe-rifle'. + SHEREEF

xe'ro-bá-tes (zē-rŏb'ȧ-tēz), n. [NL. ; Gr. ξηρός dry + βάτης one that treads (taken as a walker, goer)] Zoöl. Syn. of Gopherus, a genus of turtles. See GOPHER, 3.

xe'ro-col-lyr'i-um (zē'rō-kŏ-lĭr'ĭ-ŭm), n. [LL., Gr. ξηροκολλούριον.] A dry collyrium xe'ro-der'mi-a (-dûr'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Med. = XERODERMA.

xe'ro-form (zē'rō-fôrm ; zēr'ō-), n. [xero- + iodoform.] Pharm. A yellowish green powder used in treating wounds, abscesses, etc., and internally as an intestinal antiseptic. It is a bismuth compound derived from tribromophenol.

xe-ro'ma (zē-rō'mȧ), n. [NL. ; xero- + -oma.] Xerophthalmia.

xe-rom'y-ron (zē-rŏm'ĭ-rŏn), n. Also xe-rom'y-rum (-rŭm). [NL., fr. Gr. ξηρόμυρον.] A dry, stiff, or solid ointment.

xe'ro-nate (zē'rō-nāt), n. Chem. A salt of xeronic acid.

xe'ro-pha'gi-a (zē'rō-fā'jĭ-ȧ), n. [L.] Xerophagy.

xe'ro-phil (zē'rō-fĭl), n. [xero- + -phil.] Bot. A xerophyte.

xer'oph-thal'mus (zĕr'ŏf-thăl'mŭs), xer'oph-thal'my (zĕr'ŏf-thăl'mĭ), n. = XEROPHTHALMIA.

xe-ros'to-ma (zē-rŏs'tō-mȧ), xe'ro-sto'mi-a (zē'rō-stō'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See XERO- ; -STOME.] Med. Abnormal dryness of the mouth, due to suppression of the secretions.

xe'ro-tes (zē'rō-tēz ; zēr'ō-), n. [NL., fr. Gr ξηρότης, fr. ξηρός dry.] Med. Dryness ; a dry habit of the body.

Xe'rus (zē'rŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξηρός dry ; — from the comparative dryness and rigidity of the pectoral mammæ.] Zoöl. A genus of coarse-haired long-tailed African ground squirrels. X-l., or X-lin. Abbr. Ex interest (see EX, prep.).

Xi-ca'que (hē-kä'kē ; 262), or Xi-cak' (-käk'), n. One of a tribe of Indians forming a distinct linguistic stock, of northern Honduras. — Xi-ca'que-an (-kä'kē-ăn), a.

Xin'ca (hēŋ'kä ; 262). n. An Indian of a linguistic stock of southeastern Guatemala, living in wood-built villages when conquered in 1524 by Alvarado. They are of low culture.

xiph'i-hu'mer-a'lis (zĭf'ĭ-hū-

Xiph'o-don (zĭf'ō-dŏn), n. [NL.; Gr. ξίφος sword + ὀδούς tooth.] Paleon. A genus of small two-toed extinct artiodactyls from the Eocene of Europe, typical of a family, Xiph'o-don'ti-dæ (-dŏn'tĭ-dē), syn. of Anoplotheriidæ.

xiph'oid (zĭf'oid; zī'foid; 277), a. [Gr. ξιφοειδής sword-shaped; ξίφος a sword + εἶδος form, shape: cf. F. xiphoïde.] Anat. a Like a sword; ensiform. b Pert. to the xiphoid process; xiphoidian. — xiphoid appendage, appendix, cartilage, or process, Anat. & Zoöl., the posterior, in man the lowermost, division of the sternum; the ensiform process; the xiphisternum. It is usually more or less cartilaginous throughout life. — x. bone, a slender ossification in the nuchal ligament of certain birds, as the cormorant. — x. process. a The xiphisternum. b The tail of a king crab.

xiph'oid, n. The xiphisternum.

xiph-oi'di-an (zĭf-oi'dĭ-ăn), a. Anat. Xiphoid.

xo'a-non (zō'ȧ-nŏn), n.; L. pl. XOANA (-nȧ). [Gr. ξόανον.] Gr. Antiq. A rude and primitive image of wood; usually, an archaic wooden idol.

XP (kī rō; kē rō). [Belongs here in appearance only.] The first two letters of the Greek word ΧΡΙΣΤΟΣ, Christ; — an abbreviation used with the letters separate or, oftener, in a monogram, often inclosed in a circle, as a symbol or emblem of Christ. Its use as an emblem was introduced by Constantine the Great, whence it is known as the Constantinian symbol, or monogram.

Two forms of XP.

xu-rel' (hōō-rĕl'; 262), n. [Cf. JUREL.] a The horse-eye jack. b A saurel.

xy'lan (zī'lăn), n. Chem. A gummy substance of the pentosan class, present in woody tissue, and yielding xylose on hydrolysis; tree gum; wood gum.

xy'lem (zī'lĕm), n. [Gr. xylem, fr. Gr. ξύλον wood. Cf. PHLOEM.] Bot. That portion of a vascular bundle which consists of tracheal tissue, wood cells, and wood parenchyma; woody tissue; — disting. from phloëm.

xy'lene (zī'lēn), n. [Gr. ξύλον wood.] Chem. Any of three isomeric hydrocarbons, $C_6H_4(CH_3)_2$, of the benzene series, found in coal and wood tar and certain kinds of petroleum, and also prepared artificially. They are dimethyl derivatives of benzene, and are called specif. orthoxylene, metaxylene or isoxylene, and paraxylene. All are ordinarily colorless oily liquids, and each is the parent substance of a distinct series of compounds.

xy'le-nol (zī'lē-nōl; -nŏl), n. [xylene + -ol.] Chem. Any one of six isomeric phenol derivatives of xylene, obtained as crystalline substances, $(CH_3)_2C_6H_3{\cdot}OH$.

xy-let'ic (zī-lĕt'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating, or pert. to, a white crystalline acid, $C_6H_2(CH_3)_2(OH)CO_2H$, obtained by action of sodium and carbon dioxide on crude xylenol.

Xy'li-a (zĭ'lĭ-ȧ; zī'lĭ-), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξύλον wood: — from its woody pod.] Bot. A monotypic genus of Asiatic mimosaceous trees, having globose heads of small greenish flowers succeeded by falcate compressed pods. X. xylocarpa is the acle.

xy'lic (zĭ'lĭk), a. Chem. Designating, or pert. to, any of several isomeric acids, $C_6H_3(CH_3)_2CO_2H$, carboxyl derivatives of xylene and, equally, dimethyl derivatives of benzoic acid.

xy-lid'ic (zī-lĭd'ĭk), a. [G. *xylidin*säure.] Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, either of two crystalline dibasic acids, $C_6H_3CH_3(CO_2H)_2$, one of which is obtained by oxidizing a xylic acid and the other by oxidizing pseudocumene. They are isomeric with uvitic acid.

xy'li-dine (zĭ'lĭ-dĭn; -dēn; 184), n. Also -din. [G. xylidin.] Any one of six isomeric compounds, $(CH_3)_2C_6H_3NH_2$, amino derivatives of xylene, resembling aniline. They are liquids, or easily fusible crystalline substances, of which three are derived from metaxylene, two from orthoxylene, and one from paraxylene. The xylidine of commerce, used in making certain dyes, is a liquid consisting of a mixture of five of the above compounds.

xy'li-tone (-tōn), n. Also xylite oil. [G. xylitol. Cf. XYLITE; 2d -ONE.] Chem. A yellow oil having a geraniumlike odor, produced by the action of hydrochloric acid on acetone, and otherwise.

xy'lo- (zĭ'lō-). Combining form from Greek ξύλον, wood.

xy'lo-bal'sa-mum (zĭ'lō-bŏl'sȧ-mŭm; -bȧl'-), n. [L., balsam wood, Gr. ξυλοβάλσαμον; ξύλον wood + βάλσαμον the balsam tree, balsam.] The dried twigs of the balm-of-Gilead tree (Balsamea meccanensis).

xy'lo-graph (zĭ'lō-grȧf), n. [xylo- + -graph.] An engraving on wood, or the impression from such an engraving; a print made by xylography.

xy-log'ra-pher (zī-lŏg'rȧ-fẽr), n. One who practices, or is skilled in, xylography.

xy'lo-graph'ic (zĭ'lō-grăf'ĭk) } a. Of or pertaining to xy-xy'lo-graph'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } lography.

xy-log'ra-phy (zī-lŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [xylo- + -graphy.] 1. The art of engraving on wood or of taking impressions from engravings so made. See BLOCK PRINTING a.

2. The art of making prints from the natural wood grain.

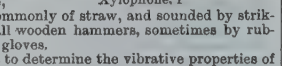
3. A method of printing in colors upon wood for purposes of house decoration.

xy'loid (zĭ'loid), a. [xylo- + -oid.] Resembling wood; having the nature of wood; woody; ligneous.

xy-lom'e-ter (zī-lŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [xylo- + -meter.] Forestry. An instrument to determine specific gravity of wood.

xy-loph'a-gous (zī-lŏf'ȧ-gŭs), a. [Gr. ξυλοφάγος eating wood; ξύλον wood + φαγεῖν to eat.] Zoöl. a Eating, boring in, or destroying, wood; — said esp. of certain insect larvæ, crustaceans, and molluska. b Of or pertaining to the genus or division Xylophaga.

xy'lo-phone (zĭ'lō-fōn), n. [xylo- + Gr. φωνή sound.] 1. Music. An instrument consisting of a series of wooden bars, graduated in length to the musical scale, resting on belts commonly of straw, and sounded by striking with two small wooden hammers, sometimes by rubbing with rosined gloves.



Xylophone. 1

2. An instrument to determine the vibrative properties of different kinds of wood.

Xy-lo'pi-a (zī-lō'pĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., incorrectly fr. Gr. ξύλον wood + πικρός bitter.] Bot. A large genus of chiefly tropical American trees or shrubs with coriaceous, often distichous leaves, rather large flowers, and berrylike aromatic fruits borne on a convex receptacle. Most have bitter wood.

xy'lo-plas'tic (zĭ'lō-plăs'tĭk), a. [xylo- + -plastic.] Formed of, or relating to casts made of, wood pulp in molds.

xy'lo-py-rog'ra-phy (-pī-rŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [xylo- + Gr. πῦρ, πυρός, fire + -graphy.] Pyrography upon wood.

xy'lo-quin'one (-kwĭn'ōn; -kwĭ-nōn'), n. [xylene + quinone.] Chem. Any dimethyl derivative, $C_6H_2(CH_3)_2O_2$, of quinone. They are yellow crystalline substances, got esp. by oxidation of xylidines. The para compound, called also phlorone, is found in coal tar and wood tar.

xy-lor'cin (zī-lôr'sĭn), n. [xylene + orcin.] Chem. Either of two isomeric crystalline compounds, $C_6H_2(CH_3)_2(OH)_2$, which are dihydroxy derivatives of xylene and are distinguished as m-xylorcin and p-xylorcin. The latter is called also β-orcin. See ORCIN.

xy'lose (zī'lōs), n. [xylo- + -ose.] Chem. A nonfermentable sugar of the pentose class, $C_5H_{10}O_5$, formed by the hydrolysis of xylan; wood sugar.

xy-los'te-in (zī-lŏs'tē-ĭn), n. [xylo- + Gr. ὀστέον bone.] Chem. A bitter white crystalline glucoside in the poisonous berries of the honeysuckle Lonicera xylosteum.

xy-lot'o-mous (zī-lŏt'ō-mŭs), a. [xylo- + root of Gr. τέμνειν to cut.] Zoöl. Capable of boring or cutting wood; — said of many insects.

Xy-lo'try-a (zī-lō'trĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; xylo- + Gr. τρύειν to rub, wear out.] A genus of marine bivalves closely allied to Teredo (in which genus it is often placed), and equally destructive to timber. One species (Xylotrya fimbriata) abounds on the north Atlantic coast of the United States.

xy'lyl (zĭ'lĭl), n. [xylo- + -yl.] Chem. Any of several isomeric univalent radicals, C_8H_9, of which the three xylenes are hydrides.

xy'lyl-ene (-lĭ-lēn), n. [See XYLYL, XYLENE.] Chem. Any of several isomeric bivalent radicals, C_8H_8, of which the three xylenes are hydrides.

Xyr'i-da'ce-æ (zĭr'ĭ-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See XYRIS; -ACEÆ.] Bot. A family of plants typifying the order Xyridales, with basal, equitant, usually distichous leaves and leafless scapes bearing flowers in the axils of imbricated scales, forming dense heads. There are two genera, Xyris being much the larger. — xyr'i-da'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Xyr'i-da'les (-lēz), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. a A Lindleyan alliance including the Xyridaceæ and related families. Obs. b An order of monocotyledonous herbs having flowers mostly with regular corolla and compound superior ovary. There are 11 families, including the Xyridaceæ, Bromeliaceæ, Commelinaceæ, and Pontederiaceæ.

Xyr'is (zĭr'ĭs), n. [L., a kind of iris, Gr. ξυρίς.] Bot. A large widely distributed genus of plants, typifying the Xyridaceæ. They have mostly yellow flowers with three sepals, the two lateral small, keeled, and persistent, the other membranous and spreading; the three stamens alternate with bearded staminodia. The species, known as yellow-eyed grass, are abundant in pine barrens of the southern United States.

xyst (zĭst), n. [L. xystus, Gr. ξυστός, fr. ξύειν to scrape, polish; — so called from its smooth and polished floor.] Gr. & Rom. Arch. A long and open portico, for athletic exercises, as wrestling, running, etc., for use in winter or in stormy weather; — sometimes inaccurately applied by the Romans to a garden walk lined with trees in a villa.

xys'tarch (zĭs'tärk), n. [L. xystarches, Gr. ξυστάρχης; ξυστός a xyst + ἄρχειν to rule.] Gr. Antiq. An officer having the superintendence of the xyst.

xys'ter (zĭs'tẽr), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξυστήρ a scraper.] Surg. An instrument for scraping bones.

X Y Z Correspondence. U. S. Hist. The correspondence with the home government of the three special envoys sent to France in 1797 by President Adams to undertake delicate negotiations with certain semiofficial persons designated in the correspondence only by the letters X Y Z. The proposal to the envoys that money should be paid as a bribe created much wrath in both countries.

Y (wī). 1. The twenty-fifth letter of the English alphabet. At the beginning of a word or syllable, except when a prefix (see Y-), it is usually pronounced as a voiced consonant with but slightly audible friction (as in yes); as a prefix, and usually in the middle or at the end of a syllable, it is a vowel (as in myth, huppy, my). See Guide to Pron. § 263. The letter comes through the Latin, being a differentiated form of V added by the Greeks (Y) to the Phœnician alphabet and having at first the value oō, later ü, coming into the Anglo-Saxon alphabet with the value ü, later ē. See ALPHABET, Illust. In words from the Anglo-Saxon, consonant Y (as in yes) represents A.-S. g (ge, gi). In Middle English this Y was often written ȝ, with the sound of y in yes (or otherwise, as final or before t, the sounds of K). The symbol ȝ disappeared in England about 1500, becoming confused with z. In certain archaic forms, as ye, ye, yat, yt, Y represents Anglo-Saxon and Middle English þ (cf. THORN, n., 4), which became confused with it. It has in such cases the value TH (cf. first YE). The name wī is prob. from OF. (assumed) wi, var. of qui, fr. LL. wi, perh. from a name of the Gothic letter having the sound of English w, but with the form of Gr. Y and in words from Greek standing for Greek υ, which in old diphthongs (as αυ) differed in sound from simple vowel υ. Etymologically, Y is most nearly related to u, i, o, j, g; as in full, fill, AS. fyllan; E. crypt, grotto; young, juvenile; day, AS. dæg. See U, I, J, G, V, W.

2 As a symbol, used to denote or indicate: a The 22d in a series. b [cap.] Chem. Yttrium. c [l. c.] Math. (1) An unknown quantity (which see). (2) An ordinate in a rectilinear coördinate system. d Elec. Admittance.

3. As a medieval Roman numeral, Y stands for 150, and $\overline{Y}$ for 150,000.

4. As an abbreviation: a In the form Y.: In wigwagging, why. In the form y. or Y.; yard; year or years.

Y, or y (wī), n.; pl. Y's or Ys (wīz). 1. The letter Y, y, or its sound.

2. Something shaped like the letter Y; as: a A forked holder to support the telescope of a leveling instrument or the axis of a theodolite; a wye. b Railroads. A pormĕr-ĭ'lĭs), n. [NL. (sc. musculus).] Zoöl. A muscle in some animals extending from the xiphoid cartilage to the proximal end of the humerus.

Xiph'i-su'ra (zĭ f' ĭ- s ū' r ȧ), Xiph'i-u'ra (-ū'rȧ), n. pl. [NL.] = XIPHOSURA. — xiph'i-su'ran (-rȧn), a. & n.

Xiph'i-us (zĭf'ĭ-ŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξίφος a sword.] Zoöl. Syn. of ZIPHIUS. — xiph'i-id (-ĭd), a. & n., xiph'i-oid (-oid), a.

xi-phop'a-gus (zĭ-fŏp'ȧ-gŭs), n. [NL.; xiphoid + Gr. παγγύναι to unite, fasten together.] Teratol. A monster consisting of twins united by the epigastrium, as the Siamese twins.

xiph'o-phyl'lus (zĭf'ō-fĭl'ŭs; z Y-f ō f' Y-l ŭ s), a. [Gr. ξίφος sword + φύλλον leaf.] Bot. Having sword-shaped leaves.

xiph'o-ster'num (z Y f'ō-s t ûr'-nŭm), n.; L. pl. -STERNA (-nȧ). Anat. = XIPHISTERNUM.

Xiph'o-su'ra (-sū'rȧ), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. ξίφος sword + οὐρά tail.] Zoöl. The order of arthropods constituted by the king crabs. It includes a single living family, Xiph'o-su'ri-dæ (-rĭ-dē), of which Xiph'o-su'rus (-sŭ'rŭs), containing the American king crab, is the type genus — xiph'o-su'ran (-rȧn), a. & n. — xiph'o-sure (zĭf'ō-shōōr), n. — xiph'o-su'rous (-sŭ'rŭs), a.

Xi-phu'ra (zĭ-fū'rȧ), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. = XIPHOSURA. — xi-phu'rous (-rŭs), a.

Xi-su'thros (zĭ-sōō'thrŏs), n. A Greek corruption of Atra-Khasis or Khasis-Atra, the "Very Clever" or "Very Pious," an epithet applied to Ut-napishtim (which see). Atra-Khasis may, however, have been the name of the hero of the deluge in a second Babylonian version of the myth.

Xmas. Abbr. or contraction. Christmas. Properly, the X is the Greek letter Chi. See X, 2 c.

X-n., or X-nenw. Abbr. Ex new (see EX, prep.).

Xn. Abbr. Christian. See XMAS.

Xnty., or Xty. Abbr. Christianity. See XN.

Xo'as (ksō'ăs; the x represents a click, see 4th CLICK, 3), n. See KAFIR, n., 3.

Xper., or Xr. Abbr. Christopher.

X rays. See under X, a.

X'-ray' tube. See under X, a.

X stopper. See X, n., 3.

Xt. Abbr. Christ. See X, 2 c.

Xtian. Abbr. Christian. See XT.

xul, xuld. ✝ SHALL, SHOULD.

Xu'ry (zū'rĭ), n. A Morisco boy, servant to Crusoe, in De Foe's "Robinson Crusoe."

Xu'thus (zū'thŭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ξοῦθος.] See ION.

xy'la-m'ide (zī-lăm'īd; -ĭd; 184), n. Also -id. [xylic + amide.] Chem. An amide of xylic acid.

xy'late (zĭ'lāt), n. Chem. A salt of xylic acid.

Xy-leb'o-rus (z ĭ-l ĕ b'ō-r ŭ s), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξυλητβόρος eating wood.] Zoöl. An extensive genus of small timber borers or ambrosia beetles. See AMBROSIA BEETLE.

xylidine red or scarlet. Ponceau 2 R. See DYE.

Xyl'i-na (zĭl'ĭ-nȧ), n. [NL., prob. fr. Gr. ξύλινος wooden.] Zoöl. A genus of thick-bodied noctuid moths with the fore wings rounded at the apex, the proboscis short, and the antennæ of the male simple. The larvæ often bore into fruit, and are known as green fruit worms. Some class it as the type of a family, Xy-lin'i-dæ (zĭ-lĭn'ĭ-dē). — xyl'i-nid (zĭl'ĭ-nĭd), a. & n.

xy-lin'de-in (z ĭ-l ĭ n' d ē-ĭ n), n. [F. xylindéine, fr. Gr. ξύλον wood + indigo.] Chem. A green or blue coloring matter produced by Pezizа.

xy'lite (zĭ'lĭt), n. [Gr. ξύλον wood.] Chem. A liquid, prob. a mixture, in crude wood spirits and boiling at about 61° C.

xy'lol (zĭ'lŏl), n. A pentahydric alcohol, $C_5H_7(OH)_5$, got as a sirupy liquid by reduction of xylose.

xy'lo-carp (zĭ'lō-kärp), n. [xylo- + -carp.] A hard woody fruit.

xy'lo-car'pous (-kär'pŭs), a. Having fruit which becomes woody or hard.

Xy-loc'o-pa (z Y-l ŏ k'ō-p ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ξυλοκόπος wood cutting.] Zoöl. A genus of hymenopterous insects including the carpenter bees.

xy-lo'di-um (zĭ-lō'dĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -DIA (-ȧ). [NL.; xylo- + dim. of Gr. ὁδός way.] Bot. Nascent wood or xylem; a Lignin.

xy-log'ly-phy (zĭ-lŏg'lĭ-fĭ), n. [xylo- + Gr. γλύφειν to carve.] Artistic wood carving.

xy-loi'din (zĭ-loi'dĭn), xy-loi'dine (-dĭn; -dēn; 184), n. [See XYLOID.] An explosive substance obtained by action of nitric acid on starch, wood fiber, etc. Cf. NITRAMIDIN.

xy'lol (zĭ'lŏl; -lōl), n. [xylo- + 2d -ol.] Xylene xy-lo'ma (zĭ-lō'mȧ), n.; L. pl. -MATA (-tȧ). [NL., fr. Gr. ξύλον wood.] In mycology, a sclerotiumlike body that does not send out sporophores, but produces sporogenous structures.

xy-lon'ic (zĭ-lŏn'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating, or pert to, a crystalline acid, $C_4H_7(OH)_4CO_2H$, got by oxidizing xylose.

xy'lon-ite (zĭ'lŏn-ĭt), n. [Gr. ξύλον wood.] Celluloid.

Xy-loph'a-ga (zĭ-lŏf'ȧ-gȧ), n. [NL. See XYLOPHAGOUS.] Zoöl. A genus of marine bivalves which bore holes in wood. They are allied to Pholas.

Xy-loph'a-ga, n. pl. [NL. See XYLOPHAGOUS.] a A division of Hymenoptera consisting of the Siricidæ. b A division of weevils.

xy-loph'a-gan (-găn), n. [See XYLOPHAGOUS.] Zoöl. One of the Xylophaga. — a. Pert. to the Xylophaga.

xy'lo-phag'i-dæ (z Y-l ō-f ă j'Y-dē), n. pl. [NL. See XYLOPHAGOUS.] Zoöl. A family of dipterous flies whose larvæ live in decayed wood. The type genus is Xy-loph'a-gus (zĭ-lŏf'ȧ-gŭs).

xy-loph'i-li (zĭ-lŏf'ĭ-lĭ), n. pl. [NL.; xylo- + Gr. φίλος loving.] Zoöl. A tribe of scarabæoid beetles whose larvæ live on decayed wood. — xy-loph'i-lan (-lăn), n. — xy-loph'i-lous (-lŭs), a.

xy-lop'o-list (zĭ-lŏp'ō-lĭst), n. [Gr. ξυλοπώλης; ξύλον + πωλεῖν sell.] Dealer in wood. Obs.

xy'lo-styp'tic (-stĭp'tĭk), a. [xylo- + styptic.] In xylostyptic ether. Pharm. Styptic collodion.

xy'lo-tile (zĭ'lō-tĭl), n. [G. xylotil; Gr. ξύλον wood + τίλος fiber.] A hydrous silicate of iron and magnesium in delicately fibrous forms, derived from alteration of asbestos (or chrysolite).

Xy-rich'thys (zĭ-rĭ k'thĭ s), n. [NL.; Gr. ξυρόν razor + ἰχθύς fish.] Zoöl. The genus to which the razor fishes belong.

xys'tos (zĭs'tŏs), n. = XYST.

xys'tus (-tŭs), n. = XYST. [(-tĭ). = XYST.

y. ✝ I, pron.

y. Obs. shortened form of IN.

y-. For various words beginning y-, see the forms in I-.

tion of track consisting of two diverging tracks connected by a cross track.

Y (wī), a. Having the general shape of the (capital) letter Y; as, Y branch or Y-branch (a Y-shaped pipe in plumbing), Y bridge or Y-bridge, Y connection or Y-connection (a star connection), Y cross or Y-cross (a Y-shaped cross, or a Y branch), Y curve or Y-curve, Y track or Y-track, Y tube or Y-tube, etc.—Y potential, or Y-potential, Elec., the potential difference between a terminal and the neutral point of a three-phase armature.

y- (I-), or i-. [ME. y-, i-, AS. ge-, akin to D. & G. ge-, OHG. gi-, ga-, Goth. ga-, and perh. to Latin con-; originally meaning, together. Cf. COM-, AWARE, ENOUGH, HANDIWORK, IWIS, LIKE, a.] A prefix of obscure meaning, originally used with verbs, adverbs, adjectives, and nouns, but in the Middle English period, and by later archaists, used chiefly with past participles. For the sense of many of the latter, not entered, see the main word.

-y. [F. -ie or -ie L. -ia; cf. Gr. -ια.] A suffix of nouns, esp. of abstract nouns; as, envy, history, treasury, etc. Cf. -IA.

-y, or -ie. A noun suffix forming diminutives; as, Johnny, Kitty, lassie, doggy, birdie, etc. Cf. -IE.

-y, or (esp. after a y) -ey. [AS. -ig.] An adjective suffix signifying of, pertaining to, characterized by, having, full of, or the like; as, heavy, guilty, stony, windy, clayey, etc.

yab'ber (yăb'ẽr), v. i. [Prob. fr. native yabba; cf. native dial. yaman, yarra, to speak.] To talk; to jabber; esp., to talk in the broken English used by the Australian aborigines. Australia.

yab'ber, yab'ber-yab'ber, n. Talk; jabber; language; conversation; esp., the broken English of the Australian aborigines. Australia.

yab'by, yab'bie (yăb'ĭ), n. [Native name in Gippsland yappy.] A small burrowing crawfish (Cheraps bicarinatus), found in most creeks and water holes in Australia.

yacht (yŏt), n. [D. jagt, jacht; perh. properly, a chase, hunting, fr. jagen to chase, hunt, akin to G. jagen, OHG. jagōn, of uncertain origin.] Naut. A vessel larger than a rowboat, used either for private pleasure, or as a vessel of state to convey distinguished persons from one place to another; a vessel used only for private or official trips, racing, etc. The name is sometimes erroneously applied to public vessels engaged in tourist or pleasure traffic.

yacht, v. i.; YACHT'ED; YACHT'ING. To sail, cruise, or race in a yacht, as owner or guest.

yacht'-built', a. Built on the lines, or constructed with the elegance, of a yacht.

yacht'ing, p. pr. & vb. n. of YACHT. Specif.: n. Sailing for pleasure in a yacht.

yachts'man (yŏts'măn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). Also, Obs. or R., yacht'man. One who owns or sails a yacht for pleasure.—yachts'man-ship, yacht'man-ship, n.

ya'gua-run'di (yä'gwä-rŭn'dĭ), n. [Guarani.] A grayish unspotted wild cat (Felis jaguarundi) ranging from Paraguay to southern Texas, by some considered a color variety of the eyra (which see). Cf. DICHROMATIC, 2.

Yah'gan (yä'găn), n. One of a nearly extinct tribe of Fuegian Indians on Beagle Channel, Tierra del Fuego, now under mission control. They were among the lowest of savages, though efficient hunters and fishers and of good physique.

Ya'hoo (yä'hōō), n. 1. In Swift's "Gulliver's Travels," one of a filthy race of brutes having the form and all the vices of man. The Yahoos are represented as being subject to the Houyhnhnms, or horses endowed with reason.

2. [l. c.] Hence, any brutish or vicious character.

3. [l. c.] A raw countryman; a lout; a greenhorn. U. S.

Yah'weh (yä'wĕ), Yah'we, n. Also Jah'veh (yä'-), Jah've, etc. A modern transliteration of the Hebrew word translated Jehovah in the Bible; — used by some critics to discriminate the tribal god of the ancient Hebrews from the Christian Jehovah. See TETRAGRAMMATON.

☞ Yahweh or Yahwé is the spelling now generally adopted by scholars; the older Jahveh is a Germanism.

Yah'wism (yä'wĭz'm), n. Also Jah'vism (-vĭz'm). 1. The religion or worship of Yahweh (Jehovah), or the system of doctrines, etc., connected with it.

2. Use of Yahweh as a name for God.

Yah'wist (yä'wĭst), n. Also Jah'vist (yä'vĭst), Jah'wist, older Je-ho'vist. The author of the passages of the Old Testament, esp. those of the Hexateuch, in which God is styled Yahweh, or Jehovah; the author of the Yahwistic, or Jehovistic, Prophetic Document (J); also, the document itself. Cf. ELOHIST.

The characteristic manner of the Jehovist differs from that of his predecessor [the Elohist]. He is fuller and freer in his descriptions; more reflective in his assignment of motives and causes; more artificial in mode of narration. S. Davidson.

Yah-wis'tic(yä-wĭs'tĭk), a. Also Jah-vis'tic, Jah-wis'tic, older Je-ho-vis'tic. Characterized by the use of Yahweh, or Jehovah, as a name of God; — said of certain parts of the Old Testament, esp. of the Hexateuch. Cf. ELOHISTIC.

Yahwistic Prophetic Document or Narrative, Old Test. Criticism, an ancient anecdotal history, supposed by some to have been the source of the Yahwistic passages of the Old Testament; — called also, from its supposed origin in Judah, the Judean Prophetic Document.

yak (yăk), n. [Tibetan gyag.] A large wild or domesticated ox (Bos or Poëphagus grunniens) of Tibet and adjacent elevated parts of central Asia. Its natural color is blackish brown. Old bulls sometimes become six feet high at the shoulder and weigh 1,200 pounds. Domestic or crossbred varieties are of different colors and smaller size. The hair on the back is short and smooth, but that on the breast, sides, legs, and tail is very long and wavy. When domesticated, the yak is used as a beast of burden, and its flesh, milk, hide, and hair are utilized. See CHOWRY.

Yak. (1/8)

Yaz'oo Fraud (yăz'ōō; yä'zōō). U. S. Hist. The grant by the State of Georgia, by Act of Jan. 7, 1795, of 35,000,000 acres of her western territory, for $500,000, to four companies known as the Yazoo Companies from the region granted; — commonly so called, the act being known as the Yazoo Frauds Act, because of alleged corruption of the legislature, every member but one being a shareholder in one or more of the companies. The act granting the land was repealed in 1796 by a new legislature, and the repealing provision was incorporated in the State constitution in 1798. In 1802 the territory was ceded to the United States. The claims of the purchasers, whom Georgia had refused to compensate, were sustained by the United States Supreme Court, which (1810) declared the repealing act of 1796 unconstitutional. Congress in 1814 ordered the lands sold and appropriated $5,000,000 to pay the claims.

yean'ling (-lĭng), n. [yean + 1st -ling. Cf. EANLING.] A lamb or a kid; an eanling.

year (yēr), n. [ME. yer, yeer, ȝer, AS. gēar; akin to OFries. iēr, gēr, OS. jār, gēr, D. jaar, OHG. jār, G. jahr, Icel. ār, Dan. aar, Sw. år, Goth. jēr, Gr. ὥρα a season of the year, springtime, a part of the day, an hour, ὥρος a year, Avestan yāre year. Cf. HOUR, YORE.] 1. The time of one apparent revolution of the sun around the ecliptic; the period occupied by the earth in making its revolution around the sun, called the astronomical, equinoctial, natural, solar, or tropical year, whose length is 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 45.51 seconds. The fictitious year is the interval between two successive returns of the sun's center to mean longitude 280° (used in reducing star places). The lunar year is a period of 12 lunar months. The lunar astronomical year, of 12 lunar synodical months, has a length of 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes, 34 seconds. The common lunar year consists of 12 lunar civil months, or about 354½ days. See ANOMALISTIC YEAR, SIDEREAL YEAR, TROPICAL YEAR.

2. A period of 365 days or, in the case of leap year, 366 days. The calendar, civil, or legal year has the same number of days, is divided into 12 calendar months, and is now reckoned as beginning with January 1 and ending with December 31. Formerly, in England, the legal year began on Annunciation Day, March 25; the change to January 1 took place on that day in 1752; in Scotland such a change had been made in 1600. Hence, dates between January 1 and March 25 are sometimes written thus: February 21, 1574-5, that is, 1575 according to present reckoning. In statutes a year means a calendar year, unless a contrary intention is expressed. At the common law and as defined in some codes a half year consists of 182 days; a quarter of a year, of 91 days. The lunar year of 354 days, divided into 12 months, is the regular common Hebrew year and was the ancient Greek year, intercalation being resorted to to maintain some correspondence between the lunar and solar years. See CALENDAR, LEAP YEAR, BISSEXTILE, COMMON YEAR, MOHAMMEDAN YEAR, JEWISH CALENDAR, GREEK CALENDAR, LUNISOLAR PERIOD, SOTHIC YEAR.

3. The time in which any planet completes a revolution about the sun; as, the year of Jupiter or of Saturn.

4. pl. Age, or old age; as, a man in years. Shak.

year and a day, Law, the time allowed in various legal limitations of time for an act or an event to take place, so that there shall certainly be an interim of a full year. In computing a year and a day after an event, the day on which the event happened is included in the reckoning. Sometimes in arbitrary legal reckoning the period is longer than a calendar year and a day. — y. in, y. out, from year to year; always. — y. of confusion, the 707th year of the Roman Era, 47 B. C., when the Julian calendar was introduced. — y. of grace, any year of the Christian Era; annus Domini; A. D. or A. D. — y. of our Lord, annus Domini; year of grace. — y.'s mind, Eccl., a commemoration of a deceased person, as by a Mass, a year after his death. Cf. MONTH'S MIND, a.

year bird. An East Indian white-tailed hornbill (Rhyticeros undulatus) having on the base of the beak strong plications, each supposed to represent a year of growth.

year'book' (yēr'bo͝ok'), n. 1. A book published yearly; any annual report or summary of the statistics or facts of a year, designed to be used as a reference book; as, a church yearbook.

2. Eng. Law. Any of the series of books containing annual reports of cases as judged in the courts of England from 1292 (20 Edw. I.) to the reign of Henry VIII. They were published annually in Law French at the expense of the crown, and afford the earliest reports of any substantial value as precedents. There are several breaks in the series.

year'ling (-lĭng), n. [year + 1st -ling.] An animal one year old, or in the second year of its age; — applied chiefly to cattle, sheep, and horses. The racing and trotting rules provide that the age of a horse shall be reckoned from Jan. 1st of the year of foaling.

Ygg'dra-sill (ĭg'drȧ-sĭl), n. [Icel.] Norse Myth. The great tree which supports the universe; — in the "Grimnismal" called Askr Yggdrasills (Yggdrasill's ash), Yggdrasill being probably a name for the wind. The same poem describes the tree as having three roots, Hel dwelling under one (cf. NIFLHEIM), the frost giants under another (cf. JOTUNNHEIM), and mankind under the third (cf. MIDGARD). A wise eagle sits at the top; the roots are gnawed by Nithhogg and other serpents; harts bite the foliage, and the squirrel Ratatosk carries words of strife up and down. Other poems give varying accounts regarding Yggdrasill, on the basis of which Viktor Rydberg reconstructs it as follows: The northern root stands over the reservoir Hvergelmir and over Niflhel, inhabited by the frost giants, where are the nine regions of punishment, including Nastrond. The second, or central, root overspreads the region of Mimir's fountain; the third, or southern, root is over Urth's fountain and the subterranean assembly place of the gods, connected by Bifrost with Asgard. The quaking of Yggdrasil releases the monsters that are confined in the lower regions for the conflict of Ragnarok. Yggdrasill, as the world tree, is generally considered to be a late addition to Norse mythology. Cf. NINE WORLDS, NOEN, YMIR.

Yid'dish (yĭd'ĭsh), n. [G. jüdisch, prop., Jewish, fr. Jude Jew. See JEW, JEWISH.] A language used by German and other Jews, being a Middle German dialect developed under Hebrew and Slavic influence; Judeo-German. It is written in Hebrew characters.

yield (yēld), v. t.; YIELD'ED; YIELD'ING. [ME. yelden, 3elden, 3ilden, AS. gieldan, gildan, to pay, give, restore, make an offering; akin to OFries. jelda, OS. geldan, D. gelden to cost, to be worth, G. gelten, OHG. geltan to pay, restore, make an offering, be worth, Icel. gjalda to pay, to give up, Dan. gielde to be worth, Sw. gälla to be worth, gälda to pay, Goth. gildan in fragildan, usgildan. Cf. GELD a payment, GUILD.] 1. To pay or repay; to give a reward to; to requite; reward; recompense. Obs. or Archaic.

Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
And the gods yield you for't. Shak.

2. To give in return for labor expended, or to produce as payment or interest on what is expended or invested; to pay; as, he made an investment that now yields five or six per cent.

When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. Gen. iv. 12.

3. To produce; furnish; afford; render; give forth. "Vines yield nectar." Milton.

4. To give; grant; afford; as, to yield passage.

Pray for my soul, and yield me burial. Tennyson.

5. To give up, as something that is claimed or demanded; to make over to one who has a claim or right; to surrender; relinquish; render; as, to yield a city, an opinion, a right, etc.

And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown. Shak.

6. To admit to be true; to concede; allow; acknowledge.

I yield it just, said Adam, and submit. Milton.

to yield the breath, the ghost, or the life, to die; to expire; — often followed by up.

yield (yēld), v. i. 1. To produce; bear; to make or give a return; as, the apple trees did not yield well this year.

2. To give way; to give up the contest; to submit; surrender; succumb; to cease opposition; to comply; consent; as, the door yielded; I yielded to his request.

And yield to mercy while 'tis offered you? Shak.

3. To give place, as to something superior; to give precedence; to be succeeded by something or some one else; as, they will yield to us in nothing.

Syn. — YIELD, SUBMIT. To YIELD is in general to give up or give way; SUBMIT often implies a more definite surrender to another's will or authority; as, "He laughed, and yielded readily" (Tennyson); "Prove it: — if better, I submit and bow" (Cowper); "when evening yields to night" (Shelley); "the Indian Summer of her heart, which was slow to submit to age" (Stevenson). But the two words are often interchangeable. See OBEDIENT.

yield (yēld), n. [From YIELD, v.; cf. AS. gield a payment.] 1. Payment; tribute. Obs.

2. That which is yielded; amount or quantity yielded; product; — applied esp. to products resulting from growth or cultivation. "A goodly yield of fruit." Bacon.

3. Act of yielding. Rare.

yield'ing, p. pr. of YIELD. Specif.: p. a. That yields; inclined to yield; esp., inclined to give way, or comply; flexible; compliant; as, a yielding temper.

Syn. — Obsequious, attentive, obedient.

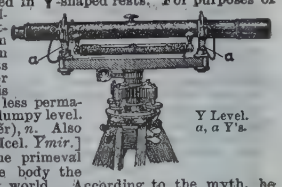
-yl (-ĭl). [Gr. ὕλη wood, material.] Chem. A suffix used in names of chemical radicals, esp. univalent ones, as in ethyl, carbonyl, hydroxyl, etc. The suffix -yl was first used in 1832 by Liebig and Wöhler in naming benzoyl, in the sense of stuff, or fundamental material, then in 1834 by Dumas and Péligot in naming methyl, in the sense of wood. After this -yl was generally used in the former sense.

y'lang–y'lang (ē'läng-ē'läng), n. [From a name in the Philippines; cf. Tag. álang-álang Canangium odoratum.] a An annonaceous tree (Canangium odoratum) of Malaysia, the Philippines, etc. It has greenish yellow, very fragrant flowers, and is often planted for shade. b An essence or perfume distilled from the flowers of this tree.

Y level, or Y'–lev'el, n. A surveyor's level having the telescope supported in Y-shaped rests. For purposes of adjustment the telescope can be rotated around its own axis, or can be taken out of the supports and turned end for end. Adjustment is easier, but much less permanent, than with a dumpy level.



Y Level.

Lith. jungas, Russ. igo, Ir. ughaim harness, W. iau yoke, L. jugum, Gr. ζυγόν, Skr. yuga, and to L. jungere to join, Gr. ζευγνύναι, Skr. yuj. Cf. JOIN, JOUGS, 1st JUST, JUGULAR, SUBJUGATE, SYZYGY, YUGA, ZEUGMA.] 1. A bar or frame of wood by which two draft animals, esp. oxen, are joined at the heads or necks for working together. The modern yoke for oxen is usually a piece of timber hollowed, or made curving, near each end, and laid on the necks of the oxen, being secured in place by two bows, one inclosing each neck, and fastened through the timber. In some countries the yoke consists of a flat piece of wood fastened to the foreheads of the oxen by thongs about the horns. Connection with the load is by a chain or rope from a hook or ring in the middle of the yoke.

2. A frame or piece resembling a yoke, as in use or shape; specif.: a A frame of wood fitted to a person's shoulders for carrying pails, etc., suspended on each side; as, a milkmaid's yoke. b A frame worn on the neck of an animal, as a cow, pig, or goose, to prevent passage through a fence. c A bar by which the end of the tongue of a wagon or carriage is suspended from the collars of the harness. d A frame or convex piece by which a bell is hung for ringing it. See BELL, Illust. (6). e Naut. A crosspiece on the head of a boat's rudder. To its ends lines are attached which lead forward, either to the hands of a steersman or to the drum of a steering wheel, so that the boat can be steered from farther forward. f Chiefly Mach. A clamp or similar piece that embraces two other parts to hold or unite them in their respective or relative positions, as a strap connecting a slide valve to the valve stem, or the soft iron block or bar permanently connecting the pole pieces of an electromagnet, as in a dynamo. g Mach. A slotted crosshead used in donkey engines, steam fire engines, etc., in place of a connecting rod. h Arch. A tie securing two members together; specif., the horizontal piece forming the head of a window frame. i A band or shaped piece cut to fit the shoulders or the hips, and intended to support the gathered or plaited hanging parts of a garment, as a skirt.

3. Fig.: That which connects or binds; a tie; link; bond.
> Boweth your neck under that blissful yoke . . .
> Which that men clepeth spousal or wedlock. Chaucer.

4. A mark or emblem of subjection, submission, humiliation, or servitude; hence, servitude; slavery; bondage; service. In antiquity the Romans and others made captured foes pass under a symbolical yoke consisting of a spear resting horizontally upon two upright ones.
> Our country sinks beneath the yoke. Shak.
> My yoke is easy, and my burden is light. Matt. xi. 30.

5. sing. & pl. Two animals yoked together; a couple; a pair that work together; — also, rarely, used of persons.

yolk (yōk; yōlk; 277), n. [ME. yolke, yelke, yolke, yelke, AS. geoloca, gealeca, fr. geolu yellow. See YELLOW.] 1. a In popular language, the yellow spheroidal mass of food material surrounded by the white in the egg of a bird or reptile. b Embryol. The contents of the ovum, or egg cell, of an animal. The protoplasmic material is distinguished as formative yolk, the inert nutritive material, usually present, as food yolk, or nutritive yolk. Often, in exact usage, yolk is restricted to the nutritive material only, the food yolk. In the egg of a bird the formative yolk occupies a small area (the cicatricle) at one side of a relatively enormous mass of food yolk. The latter, which serves only as nutriment for the embryo, consists of a central flask-shaped mass and numerous thin concentric layers of light yellow white yolk, alternating with thicker layers of darker yellow yolk. See EGG, Illust. In the ova of other animals the food yolk, when present, may be distributed uniformly through the protoplasm (alecithal ova) or more or less concentrated toward one pole (telolecithal ova) or accumulated at the center of the cell (centrolecithal ova). Its amount determines the size of the ovum, and its distribution has a profound effect on the character of the segmentation. See OVUM, 1 and Illust. Chemically, yolk contains vitellin, lecithin, proteid, nuclein, cholesterin, fat, etc.

2. Suint.

yolk plug. Embryol. A pluglike mass of yolk cells found in the blastopore of the embryos of certain vertebrates yolk sac. Embryol. A more or less spherical membranous sac attached to an embryo and inclosing food yolk, as in most vertebrates and cephalopods. It is continuous, through the vitelline duct, with the intestinal cavity of the embryo, and, being abundantly supplied with blood vessels, is, throughout embryonic life and in some forms later, the chief organ of nutrition. Cf. UMBILICAL VESICLE.

Yo'ru-ba (yō'rōō-bä), n. A Negro of an extensive linguistic family of the African Slave Coast, mainly between Dahomey and the lower Niger. Some are Christians or Mohammedans, but most are pagan fetishists. About 1820 their native empire was overthrown by the Fulahs, and they became divided into a number of petty kingdoms or tribes, the most noteworthy being the Egba. Of interior tribes the type is Negroid rather than Negro. Weaving, dyeing, tanning, smithery, pottery, and wine making, are among their industries, and before the use of letters they employed a device like Peruvian quipu to record events. Also, their language, mostly monosyllabic.

you (yōō), pron., poss. YOUR (yōōr) or YOURS (yōōrz); dat. & obj. YOU. [ME. you, eou, eow, dat. & acc., AS. ēow, used as dat. & acc. of ge, gē, ye; akin to OFries. iu, io, OS. ïu, D. u, G. euch, OHG. iu, dat., iuwih, acc., Icel. yðr, dat. & acc., Goth. izwis, of uncertain origin. Cf. YOUR.] A personal pronoun of the second person, indicating the person or persons addressed. You is used: 1. As objective case of ye, pl., originally its only use: a As dative of indirect object; as: We give you our greeting. b As direct object of a verb or preposition.
> Ye go to Canterbury; God you speed. Chaucer.

c Reflexively, either as direct or as indirect object.

2. As nominative or pl.; — now usually replacing ye.

about 1830. They advocated the principles of democracy, socialism, and rationalism, the separation of church and state, and the raising of the social and political position of woman. Among their leading exponents were Gutzkow, Heine, Laube, Kühne, Mundt, and Wienborg. The organization of Young Germany was broken up after the failure of the revolutionists of 1848–49. — Young Guard. See OLD GUARD a. — y. hyson. See HYSON. — Y. Ireland, a party of Irish agitators arising during the efforts of O'Connell after 1841 for the repeal of the Act of Union, and differing from him in their advocacy of seeking political reform and separation from England by physical force. To this end the Young Irelanders attempted to bring together both Protestants and Roman Catholics. Alarmed by the party's activity in 1848, the British government arrested and deported some of the leaders, soon after which the movement ended. — Y. Italy [It. La Giovane Italia], an association of Italians organized in 1831 by Mazzini to deliver the Italian peninsula from Austrian domination and to unite it under a republican form of government. Unlike the Carbonari (see CARBONARO), it sought to attain its purposes by agitation and open insurrection rather than by conspiracy. Although short-lived and failing to promote a revolution, it served to quicken the spirit of Italian patriotism and to facilitate the subsequent success of Victor Emmanuel and Cavour. Societies in other countries were formed with Young Italy as a model. — y. laird, the eldest son and heir of a "laird." Scot. — y. man, a beau, or suitor. Uncultivated. — Y. Men's Christian Association, an organization for promoting the spiritual, intellectual, social, and physical welfare of young men, founded, June 6, 1844, by George Williams (knighted therefor by Queen Victoria) in London. In 1851 it extended to the United States and Canada, and in 1855 representatives of similar organizations throughout Europe and America formed an international body. The movement has successfully expanded not only among young men in general, but also specifically among railroad men, in the army and navy, with provision for Indians and negroes, and a full duplication of all the various lines of operation in the boys' departments. — Y. Norway, a peasant radical party arising in Norway about 1833 and championed by Henrik Wergeland. — y. one, a young human being; a child; also, a young animal, as a colt. — Y. People's Society of Christian Endeavor or Endeavour. See under CHRISTIAN. — Y. Poland. See YOUNG EUROPE. — Y. Pretender, Charles Edward Stuart (1720–88), the Young Adventurer, the Young Chevalier, affectionately called Prince Charlie, who nominally led the adventurous insurrection of 1745 in England. He was son of James, the Old Pretender and Chevalier St. George. — Y. Ros'ci-us, the (rŏsh'ĭ-ŭs), William Henry West Betty (1791–1874), who acquired fame and fortune as a boy actor. — Y. Switzerland, a political organization formed soon after Young Europe (which see) for the purpose of bringing about an Alpine confederation, including Switzerland, Tirol, Savoy, and the rest of the Alpine chain. — Y. Turkey, a party of Turks, reorganized, at Geneva, in 1891 to effect radical political and social reforms in the Ottoman Empire. The Young Turks were ruthlessly treated as rebels by the government, notably in the spring of 1901, but in 1908 they brought about a bloodless revolution, compelling the despotic Sultan Abdul-Hamid II. to proclaim a constitution guaranteeing freedom of speech, of the press, and right of assembly and forcing him to convoke a parliament. The sultan's actions in alleged violation of the constitution, together with a mutiny in his favor of certain troops, resulted in 1909 in his deposition by the Young Turks, who controlled the army, and in the elevation of his brother Mohammed Reshad Effendi to the throne as Mehmed V. — Y. Women's Christian Association, an organization for promoting the spiritual, intellectual, social, and economic welfare of young women, originating in 1855 with Lady Kinnaird's home for young women, and Miss Emma Roberts's prayer union for young women, in England, which were combined in the year 1884 as a national association. Now nearly all the civilized countries, and esp. the United States, have local, national, and international organizations.

young (yŭng), n. The offspring of animals, either a single animal or offspring collectively.

with young, with child; pregnant.

young'er (yŭŋ'gẽr), compar. of YOUNG. — younger children, Eng. Law, in the law of primogeniture, any children other than the eldest male child, including in the broadest use all daughters. — y. hand, Card Playing, the one not having the lead, in two-handed games.

young'ling (yŭng'lĭng), n. [AS. geongling.] 1. A young person; a youth; also, an animal, plant, etc., which is in its early life; any young, immature, or recent thing. "More dear . . . than younglings to their dam." Spenser. 2. A beginner; a neophyte; a novice. Rare.

young'ling (yŭng'lĭng), a. Young; youthful.

Young's modulus (yŭngz). [After Thomas Young, English physicist.] Physics. A numerical quantity denoting the resistance of a substance to longitudinal stress. It may be defined as the stretching force required to double the length of a wire of unit cross section, or practically as the product of the original length and the stretching force, divided by the product of the cross section and elongation. It is a constant for any given material. Expressed in trillions of dynes per square centimeter it is: for brass, 0.83–0.97; for copper, 0.98–1.0; for lead, 0.15–0.18; for iron, 1.7–2.4; for glass, 0.66–0.78; for oak, 0.92; for poplar, 0.05. Called also the stretch modulus.

young'ster (yŭng'stẽr), n. A young person; a youngling; lad; sometimes, a young animal, as a colt or filly; specif., in the British navy, a midshipman who has not yet served four years; — distinguished from oldster.

youn'ker (yŭŋ'kẽr), n. [D. jonker, jonkheer; jong young + heer a lord, sir, gentleman. See YOUNG, a.] 1. A young gentleman, knight, or gallant. Obs. Spenser. 2. A youth; stripling; youngster. Now Colloq. 3. A novice; greenhorn; dupe. Obs.

your (yo͞or), pron. & a. [ME. your, ȝour, eowr, eower, AS. ēower, originally used as the gen. of ge, gē, ye; akin to OFries. iuwer your, OS. iuwar, D. uw, OHG. iuwēr, G. euer, Icel. yðar, Goth. izwara, izwar, and E. you. See YOU.] Of or belonging to you. Your is used: 1. As genitive case of you: of you. Obs., except in such phrases as "your rescue," "in your midst," etc., where it may be construed as an objective or other genitive.

> Ich am youre alre hele [the salvation of you all] > Piers Plowman.

2. As possessive adjective: your house; your duty. 3. Absolutely, for yours. Obs.

> When ye ben his . . . , as he is youre — Chaucer.

☞ Your, like you, is now either sing. or pl., and is sometimes used impersonally, esp. by way of designating a class or type as familiar. See YOU.

> Your medalist and critic are much nearer related. Addison.

your lane, alone by yourself. Obs.

yours (yo͞orz), pron. & a. The form of the possessive your used absolutely, that is, with no governed noun following; — often after of. "An old fellow of yours." Chaucer. See POSSESSIVE CASE. Yours sometimes is used in the specific sense of your friends or family, your letter, etc.; as in, "you and yours;" "yours of the 9th is at hand." — yours truly, yours respectfully, yours faithfully, yours sincerely, etc., conventional phrases used just before the signature in letters; — sometimes, esp. yours truly, also used substantively in colloq. or humorous speech by a speaker in alluding to himself.

your-self' (yo͞or-sĕlf'), pron.; pl. YOURSELVES (-sĕlvz'). [your + self.] An emphasized form of the pronoun of the second person. It is used: 1. For emphasis: a As a simple objective; as, here is a present for yourself. b In apposition with ye, you.

> Of which right now ye han yourselve heard. Chaucer.
> The religious movement which you yourself, as well as I, so faithfully followed from first to last. J. H. Newman.

c As a subject nominative. Archaic or Dial.

> If yourselves are old, make it your cause. Shak.

d As a predicate nominative, often with the force of by yourself, alone; as, shall you go yourself? 2. Your true, normal self or condition. Cf. HIMSELF, 2. 3. As a reflexive.

> Why should you be so cruel to yourself? Milton.

4. As a substantive. Rare.

☞ Yourself is often divided as in "your own self," being treated as possessive and noun.

youth (yo͞oth), n.; pl. YOUTHS (yo͞oths; yo͞othz) or collectively YOUTH. [ME. youthe, youhþe, ȝuheðe, ȝuweðe, ȝeoȝeðe, AS. geoguð, geogoð; akin to OS. juguð, D. jeugd, OHG. jugund, G. jugend, Goth. junda. See YOUNG.] 1. Quality or state of being young; youthfulness; juvenility. "In my flower of youth." Milton. 2. The part of life that succeeds to childhood; the period preceding maturity, usually that from puberty to maturity; adolescence; sometimes, the whole early part of life, from childhood or infancy to manhood.

> He wondered that your lordship > Would suffer him to spend his youth at home. Shak.

3. a A young person; esp., a young man.

> Seven youths from Athens yearly sent. Dryden.

b Young persons, collectively.

> It is fit to read the best authors to youth first. B. Jonson.

4. Novelty; freshness; recentness. Obs. & R.

youth'ful (yo͞oth'fo͝ol), a. 1. Possessing youth; characterized by youth; not yet mature; young.

> Such sights as youthful poets dream. Milton.

2. Of or pertaining to the early part of life; suitable to youth; as, youthful days; youthful sports. "Warm, youthful blood." Shak. "Youthful thoughts." Milton. 3. Fresh; vigorous; as, youthful strength and spirits. 4. Early. "The youthful season of the year." Shak. 5. Phys. Geog. Having accomplished but a small part of the work to be done; young; adolescent; — said of rivers, drainage, etc., also of the topography which characterizes the corresponding stage of drainage. See RIVER, 1.

Syn. — YOUTHFUL, JUVENILE, PUERILE, BOYISH. YOUTHFUL is commonly employed either in a good sense, or in extenuation; as, youthful aspirations, youthful indiscretions. JUVENILE often suggests immaturity, and is applied esp. to that which pertains to or is suited to youth; as, a juvenile performance, juvenile books. PUERILE is now used almost wholly in the sense of childish, trivial, petty; BOYISH has no such connotation; as, "the . . . simile . . . is puerile, absurd, and preposterous" (Landor); puerile objections; boyish pastimes, boyish enthusiasm. See CHILDLIKE, CRUDE.

yowl (youl), v. i.; YOWLED (yould); YOWL'ING. [ME. ȝoulen. Cf. YAWL, v. i.] To utter a loud, long, and mournful cry, as a dog; to howl; yell.

yowl, n. A loud, long, mournful cry, as of a dog; a howl.

-yte (-īt). A variant of -ITE as a suffix in the names of rocks, as in syen*yte*, andes*yte.* J. D. Dana proposed in 1868 that the suffix -ite, used for both minerals and rocks, be restricted to minerals, and -yte substituted for rocks. In maintaining this distinction he was followed by a number of American geologists and mineralogists.

yt-ter'bi-a (ĭ-tûr'bĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Chem. Ytterbium oxide, Yb_2O_3, obtained as a heavy white powder.

yt-ter'bic (-bĭk). a. Of, pert. to, or containing, ytterbium.

yt-ter'bi-um (-bĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Ytterby, in Sweden. See ERBIUM.] Chem. A rare metallic element closely resembling yttrium, and occurring (in combined form) with it and other related elements in certain minerals, as euxenite and gadolinite. It has a valence of three. Symbol, Yb; at. wt., 172.0. Called also neoytterbium and aldebaranium. The original ytterbium, to which an at. wt. of 173 was assigned, was shown in 1907 to be a mixture of this with a closely similar element, lutecium (at. wt. 174).

yt'tri-a (ĭt'rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See YTTRIUM.] Chem. Yttrium sesquioxide, Y_2O_3, obtained as a heavy white powder.

yt'tric (ĭt'rĭk), a. Of, pert. to, or containing, yttrium.

yt-trif'er-ous (ĭ-trĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. Bearing or containing yttrium or the allied elements.

yt'tri-um (ĭt'rĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Ytterby, in Sweden. See ERBIUM.] Chem. A trivalent metallic element found (combined) in gadolinite and other rare minerals. Symbol, Y; at. wt., 89.0. Associated with yttrium are certain other rare elements, as erbium, ytterbium, terbium, etc., which with yttrium constitute the yttrium group of rare-earth metals. They are studied by means of their spark or phosphorescent spectra. Their compounds are separated in a pure state only with great difficulty, and the substance which was formerly described as yttrium, and isolated as a dark gray powder, contained other elements of this group.

yt'tro-ce'rite (ĭt'rō-sē'rīt), n. Min. A hydrous fluoride of cerium, yttrium, erbium, and calcium, of violet-blue, gray, or reddish brown color, occurring in cleavable masses or granular or earthy form. H., 4–5. Sp. gr., 3.4.

yt'tro-co-lum'bite (-kō-lŭm'bīt), yt'tro-tan'ta-lite (-tăn'tȧ-līt), n. [Cf. COLUMBITE, TANTALITE.] Min. A tantalate and niobate of iron, calcium, yttrium, erbium, cerium, etc., occurring in black, brown, or yellow orthorhombic crystals. H., 5–5.5. Sp. gr., 5.5–5.9.

Yu-an' (yü-än'), n. The Mongol dynasty in Chinese history, A. D. 1260 to 1368, established by the Tatar conquest under Kublai Khan, who made Peking his capital.

Yuc'ca (yŭk'ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Sp. yuca, supposed to be fr. native name in Santo Domingo.] 1. Bot. A genus of American liliaceous, sometimes arborescent, plants having long, Yucca Moth (Pronuba yuccasella). Nat. size.

Yue/chi' (yüē'chē'), n. pl. A nomad people akin to the Tibetans. After being defeated by the Huns (Hiung-nu, in Chinese annals), they overthrew the Greco-Bactrian kingdom about 126 B. C. and started the Scythian movement which ended in the invasion of India. The Yuechi, so called in Chinese records, are probably the Tochari of Strabo.

Yu'ga (yōō'gä), n. [Skr. yuga an age, a yoke. See YOKE.] Hindu Cosmogony. One of the four ages of the world. The first is the Krita Yuga, or golden age, the duration of which is 1,728,000 years; the second is the Treta Yuga, a fourth darker and less righteous than the preceding, and a fourth briefer, enduring 1,296,000 years; the third is the Dvapara Yuga, yet a fourth darker and briefer, 864,000 years; the last is the Kali Yuga, the present age, darkest and briefest of all, enduring 432,000 years. The total period, 4,320,000 years, is a Maha Yuga or Manvantara. The close of a Manvantara is signalized by a pralaya, or apparent destruction of the world, which inaugurates the "night of Brahma," and endures until at the end of a thousand cycles of time Brahma awakes and renews the cycle of the ages, or "day of Brahma." A night and a day of Brahma form a Kalpa. The durations vary in different Hindu sources.

Y-wain', Y-waine' (ĭ-wān'), n. A Knight of the Round Table whose adventures are described in "Ywain and Gawain," an English metrical romance of the 14th century, a paraphrase of "Le Chevalier au Lyon," written in the 12th century by the French poet Chrestien de Troyes. Ywain is identical with Owain, or Owen, ap Urien, mentioned by Taliesin and other Welsh bards, and the subject of a tale in the "Mabinogion" entitled "The Lady of the Fountain." He saves a lion from a dragon, and the grateful animal thereafter attends him and assists him.

Z

Z (zē; in England commonly, in America sometimes, called zĕd; formerly also Iz'ärd). 1. The twenty-sixth and last letter of the English alphabet. It is a voiced consonant, the sonant correlative of S. Z for Middle English ȝ, with the sound of y (cf. Y), occurs in a few Scottish names and words, as Menzies, capercailzie (cf. CAPERCAILLIE). The letter Z comes from the Latin through the Greek, this having it from a Semitic source, the ultimate origin being perh. Egyptian. See ALPHABET, Illust. Etymologically Z is most closely related to s, y, and j; as in glass, glaze; E. yoke, Gr. ζυγόν, L. jugum; E. zealous, jealous. See Guide, § 266. The name ze is for older zed (see ZED), accommodated to other letter names ending with e, as those of b, c, d, etc. For the symbol ȝ see Y.

See YOKE.] Gram. A figure by which an adjective or verb which agrees with a nearer word is, by way of supplement, referred also to another more remote; as, "hic illius arma, hic currus fuit;" where fuit, which agrees directly with currus, is referred also to arma. — zeug-mat'ic (zūg-măt'ĭk), a.

Zeus (zūs), n. [Gr. Ζεύς.] Gr. Relig. The chief of the Olympian gods, "father of gods and men;" — identified by the Romans with Jupiter.

Zeus, with Attributes: Nike and Crown, Thunderbolt, and Eagle.

(1) The most primitive character of Zeus is probably as god of the elements, as rain, wind, thunder, and lightning; the thunderbolt is his sign, the rainbow, Iris, his messenger. He is especially connected with lofty mountains and has his seat upon Olympus, whence he is Zeus O-lym'pi-us (ō-lĭm'pĭ-ŭs). (2) He is also giver of victory in war and in athletic contests, whence the ægis is his attribute and Nike (victory) his attendant. Hence he is called "Ægis-bearing," "Victory-bringing," and Zeus So'ter (sō'tẽr), "Zeus, the Savior." The great Olympian and Nemean festivals were held in his honor. (3) Further, Zeus is the god of moral law and order, protector of suppliants and punisher of guilt. He is here the consort of Themis and the source of divine decrees, speaking through oracles, of which that at Dodona was preëminent. (4) He is also god of social virtues: of friendship, Zeus Phi'li-os (fĭl'ĭ-ŏs); of hospitality, Zeus Xe'ni-os (zē'nĭ-ŏs); and, in a broader sense, of family and kindred ties, Zeus Her-ke'ios (hẽr-kē'yŏs); Zeus Kte'si-os (k'tē'sĭ-ŏs), Zeus Te-le'ios (tē-lē'yŏs; ĭ l'ŏs). As a political deity, he is the head of the clan or phratry, Zeus Phra'tri-os (frā'trĭ-ŏs); of the state, Zeus Ba'si-leus' (bās'ĭ-lūs') and Zeus Po'lĭ-eus' (pō*l*'ĭ-ūs') (cf. DIPOLIA); of council, Zeus Bou-la'ios (bōō-lā'yŏs; -lĭ'ŏs); of assemblies and trials, Zeus A'go-ra'ios (ăg'ō-rā'yŏs; -rĭ'ŏs); of good faith, Zeus Pis'ti-os (pĭs'tĭ-ŏs) (cf. FIDES). (6) As the supreme deity of the whole Hellenic race, of Greece as a nation, he is called Zeus Hel-le'ni-os (hĕ-lĕ'nĭ-ŏs), and, in commemoration of the victory which preserved the race from Persian subjugation, Zeus E'leu-the'ri-os (ē*l*'ŭ-thē'rĭ-ŏs) (cf. ELEUTHERIA). (7) He was also regarded in some aspects as a chthonian, or underworld, god, and was hence called Zeus Ha'des (hā'dēz) and Zeus Mei-li'chi-os (mī-lĭk'ĭ-ŏs) (probably a euphemism; cf. DIABIA). (8) Finally, in later Greek thought, and esp. in Orphic mysticism, Zeus was viewed as a supreme, perhaps pantheistic, deity, the beginning and end of all things.

Zeus was regarded by the Greeks as a god of the Hellenic race, the original seat of whose worship was Thessaly. The myths of his overthrowing Cronus and of his conquests of the Titans and Giants have been interpreted as legendary accounts of his replacing of earlier deities, while many of his cult epithets indicate amalgamation with older local deities (as Zeus Ly-ce'us (lī-sē'yŭs), worshiped in the Peloponnesus probably with human sacrifice). Zeus is represented as the son of Cronus and Rhea and as the consort, generally, of Hera, by whom he was father of Ares, Hebe, and Hephæstus; though also of Leto, who bore to him Apollo and Artemis; of Demeter, who bore Persephone; of Dione, who bore Aphrodite; of Maïa, who bore Hermes; of Semele, who bore Dionysus; of Alcmene, mother of Hercules, Mnemosyne, mother of the Muses, and Eurynome, mother of the Charites. See JUPITER, etc.

zie'ga (zē'gȧ), n. Curd produced from milk by adding acetic acid after rennet has ceased to cause coagulation.

Zier'vo'gel proc'ess (tsēr'fō'gĕl). Metal. A process of extracting silver from its ores by roasting them so as to convert it into sulphate, leaching with water to dissolve the sulphate, and precipitating the silver by means of scrap iron or other reagent.

zig'zag' (zĭg'zăg'), n. [F. zigzag; cf. G. zickzack; orig. uncert.] 1. One of a series of short sharp turns or angles in a course; also, something characterized by such a series; a zigzag path, pattern, movement, or the like.

The fanatics going straight forward and openly, the politicians by the surer mode of zigzag. Burke.

2. Specif.: a Arch. A molding running in a zigzag line; a chevron or series of chevrons. b Fort. A zigzag approach in siege operations to avoid enfilade fire.

zig'zag', a. Having short sharp turns or angles; running this way and that in an onward course; as, a zigzag path. zigzag clover, a European red-flowered clover (Trifolium medium) having straggling stems bent zigzag at the nodes. It is grown for pasturage. — z. truss. See TRUSS, n., Illust.

zig'zag', adv. In or by a zigzag path or course.

zig'zag', v. t. & i.; -ZAGGED' (-zăgd'); -ZAG'GING (-zăg'Ing). To form or move with short turns or angles; to make or be zigzag; as, the river zigzags through the meadows.

zik'ku-rat (zĭk'ōō-răt), n. A temple tower of the Babylonians or Assyrians, consisting of a lofty pyramidal structure, built in successive stages, with outside staircases, and a shrine at the top.

zikr (zĭk'r), n. [Ar. dhikr, lit., memory, remembrance.] A religious ceremony, or act of devotion, practiced by the various orders of dervishes, or fakirs. It consists usually of the utterance or thinking of names of, and asseverations, etc., about, God, hundreds of times with the body in differing postures.

Zil'la (zĭl'ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Ar. zillah.] Bot. A genus of thorny brassicaceous plants of two species, natives of northern Africa. The leaves of Z. myagroides, of the Egyptian deserts, are boiled and eaten by Arabs.

zimb (zĭmb; zĭm), n. [Abyssinian (Amharic) zĭnb fly.] A large two-winged fly, native of Abyssinia, allied to the tsetse fly, and, like it, destructive to cattle.

zi-moc'ca (zĭ-mŏk'ȧ), n. A sponge (Euspongia zimocca) of flat form and fine quality, obtained from the Adriatic, about the Greek islands, and the coast of Barbary.

zinc (zĭŋk), n. [G. zink, prob. akin to zinn tin: cf. F. zinc, fr. G. Cf. TIN.] 1. Chem. A bluish white crystalline metallic element, brittle when cold, malleable at 120-150° C. (250-300° F.), and very brittle at 200° C. It is practically unaffected by air and moisture at ordinary temperatures. Symbol, Zn; at. wt., 65.37. Zinc occurs in considerable abundance, but probably never in the native state. Its chief ores are sphalerite or blende, smithsonite, and calamine. In New Jersey willemite and zincite are ores of zinc, and franklinite is used for making zinc white. The metal is obtained by heating an intimate mixture of ore and carbon (blende must first be roasted; smithsonite and calamine are often first calcined). In the Belgian process the mixture is heated in a large number of tubular or cylindrical clay retorts placed in a gently sloping position in a furnace (Belgian furnace); in the Silesian process the distilling vessels are larger and muffle-shaped, and the furnace (Silesian furnace) is heated to a higher temperature. The zinc vapors at first condense to a bluish powder known as zinc dust, which contains several per cent of oxide, and which finds limited use as a reducing agent. The remainder of the zinc collects as a liquid and is cast into ingots. Zinc melts at 420° C. (788° F.). At about 930° C. it boils, yielding vapors which burn in air, forming the oxide. Sp. gr. of zinc, 7-7.2. Weight of a cubic foot, 437-450 lbs. Commercial zinc, or pure zinc in contact with another metal, dissolves readily in dilute acids. Zinc is used to make roofing, sheathing, etc., to coat iron (see GALVANIZED IRON), to make alloys, as brass, and in voltaic cells. Zinc has a valence of two, and has acid properties as well as basic ones. See ZINCATE. Its salts are poisonous.

2. A piece of zinc for use in a voltaic cell.

zinc (zĭŋk), v. t.; ZINCKED or ZINCED (zĭŋkt); ZINCK'ING or ZINC'ING (zĭŋk'Ing). To treat or coat with zinc; galvanize.

zinc'ate (zĭŋk'āt), n. Chem. A compound formed from zinc hydroxide, ZnO_2H_2, by replacing the hydrogen by a metal.

zinc chloride. Chem. A white caustic substance, $ZnCl_2$, deliquescent and readily soluble, usually found in commerce in cast sticks. It is used as an escharotic and in a weak solution as a disinfectant and astringent.

zinc'ic (zĭŋk'Ĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to, containing, or like, zinc; zincous.

zinc'i-fy (zĭŋk'ĭ-fī), v. t.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING (-fī'Ing). [zinc + -fy.] To coat or impregnate with zinc; to zinc; galvanize. — zinc'i-fi-ca'tion (-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n.

zinc'ite (zĭŋk'īt), n. Min. Native zinc oxide, ZnO, a brittle, deep red to orange-yellow, hexagonal mineral usually occurring in massive or granular form; — called also red zinc ore, and red oxide of zinc. H., 4-4.5. Sp. gr., 5.43-5.7.

zinck'y (zĭŋk'Ĭ), a. Also zink'y, zinc'y. Pertaining to or containing zinc, or having its appearance.

zinc methyl, zinc methide. Chem. A colorless mobile liquid, $Zn(CH_3)_2$, due to the action of methyl iodide on a zinc sodium alloy. It is malodorous, and is spontaneously inflammable in the air. It has been very important in the synthesis of organic compounds, and is the simplest one of a series of compounds, called zinc alkyls, ZnR_2, among which are zinc ethyl, or zinc ethide, $Zn(C_2H_5)_2$; zinc propyl $Zn(C_3H_7)_2$; and zinc amyl, $Zn(C_5H_{11})_2$. These are similar in preparation and properties to zinc methyl.

zin'co- (zĭn'kō-). Combining form (also used adjectively) for zinc.

zin'co-graph (-grăf), n. A zinc plate prepared for printing by zincography; also, a print from such a plate.

zin-cog'ra-pher (zĭŋ-kŏg'rȧ-fẽr), n. One who practices zincography.

zin-cog'ra-phy (-fĭ), n. [zinco- + -graphy.] The art or process of putting designs of any kind in the form of a printing surface on zinc plates, and of producing impressions therefrom; sometimes, a process in which a relief plate is made by etching away parts of the zinc; esp., a process the same in principle as lithography in which a zinc plate replaces the stone. — zin'co-graph'ic (zĭŋ'kō-grăf'Ĭk), zin'co-graph'i-cal (-Ĭ-kăl), a.

zinc'ous (zĭŋk'ŭs), a. Chem. a Of, pert. to, like, or containing, zinc; zincic; as, zincous salts. b Hence, formerly, electropositive; basic. Cf. CHLOROUS, 2.

zinc oxide. Chem. The oxide of zinc, ZnO, occurring native as zincite, and obtained as a light white powder (flowers of zinc, philosopher's wool, nihil album, etc.) when zinc is burned. The impure oxide produced by burning the metal, roasting its ores, or in melting brass, is called pompholyx, and tutty. Zinc oxide is the pigment zinc, or Chinese, white.

zinc sender. Telegraphy. A sender, used on long lines, esp. submarine cables, which automatically sends a momentary reverse current into the circuit after every signal, to counteract retardation.

zinc sulphate. Chem. A compound, $ZnSO_4$, usually obtained by dissolving zinc in sulphuric acid, or by roasting and oxidizing certain zinc ores. It commonly forms white crystals containing seven molecules of water, and is then called also white vitriol and, when native, goslarite. It is used in dyeing and in medicine.

zinc white. Zinc oxide, used as a white pigment, esp. in water color, distemper, and fresco painting.

zing'el (tsĭng'ĕl), n. [G.] A small edible fresh-water European perch (Zingel zingel), having a round elongated body and a prominent snout.

zink'en-ite (zĭŋk'ĕn-īt), n. [After Zinken, director at one time of the Hanoverian mines.] Min. Native lead antimonite of sulphur, $PbSb_2S_4$, a steel-gray mineral of metallic luster, occurring in orthorhombic crystals and in masses. H., 3-3.5. Sp. gr., 5.30-5.35.

Zin'ni-a (zĭn'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., after J. G. Zinn (1727-59), professor of medicine at Göttingen.] a Bot. Syn. of Crassina, a genus of plants, of which C. elegans is a garden annual of numerous varieties. b [l. c.] A plant of the genus. Zinnias have long-peduncled rather coarse heads of flowers with red, purple, yellow, or white rays, and are easily cultivated.

Zin'zi-ber (zĭn'zĭ-bẽr), n. [NL., fr. L. zingiber. See GINGER.] 1. [l. c.] Ginger. Obs.

2. Bot. A genus of tropical Asiatic and Polynesian plants typifying the Zingiberaceæ. They have tuberous rootstocks, leafy stems, and a conelike cluster of imbricated bracts, each bract inclosing from one to three flowers. Z. zingiber is the common ginger; Z. cassumunar yields cassumunar ginger; Z. zerumbet yields zerumbet.

Zin'zi-ber-a'ce-æ (-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of tropical monocotyledonous plants consisting of leafy perennial herbs with aromatic rootstocks and very irregular flowers having a single perfect stamen. There are 24 genera and about 275 species, including Zinziber, Curcuma, and Alpinia. — zin'zi-ber-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Zi'on (zī'ŏn), n. [Heb. tsīyōn, orig., a hill.] 1. Jewish Antiq. A hill in Jerusalem, which, after the capture of that city by the Israelites, became the royal residence of David and his successors, the place of the temple, the center of Hebrew government, worship, and national life.

2. Hence: a The chosen people; the Israelites. b The theocracy, or church of God. c The heavenly Jerusalem. Zion Union Apostolic Methodist Episcopal Church. See METHODIST, n., 5.

Zi'on-ism (-Iz'm), n. [Zion + -ism.] Among the modern Jews, a theory, plan, or movement for colonizing their own race in Palestine, the land of Zion, or, if that is impracticable, elsewhere, either for religious or nationalizing purposes; — called also Zion movement. — Zi'on-ist, n. & a. — Zi'on-is'tic (-Is'tĭk), a.

Zi'on-ite (-īt), n. [See ZION.] 1. = RONSDORFER.

2. One who favors Zionism; a Zionist.

zip (zĭp), n. [Imitative.] A sudden sharp hissing or sibilant sound such as that made by a flying bullet. — v. i. To make, or move with, a zip.

zir'co- (zûr'kō-), zir'co-no-. Chem. Combining form (also used adjectively) indicating the presence of zirconium, as in zircofluoride.

zir'con (zûr'kŏn), n. [F., prob. orig. the same word as jargon. See JARGON a variety of zircon.] Min. Zirconium orthosilicate, $ZrSiO_4$, a tetragonal mineral occurring usually in square prisms or pyramids of adamantine luster and brown or grayish color. H., 7.5. Sp. gr., usually about 4.7. Transparent varieties are used as gems, esp. the red or brownish kinds called hyacinth. Colorless, pale yellow, or smoky varieties from Ceylon are called jargon.

zir'con-ate (-kŏn-āt), n. Chem. A compound formed by the replacement of hydrogen in zirconic hydroxide by a metal; as, sodium zirconate, Na_4ZrO_4.

zir-co'ni-a (zĕr-kō'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Chem. Zirconium dioxide, ZrO_2, usually obtained as a white amorphous powder. On account of its infusibility, and brilliant luminosity when incandescent, it is used as an ingredient of sticks for the Drummond light and of incandescent mantles.

zir-con'ic (zĕr-kŏn'Ĭk), a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, containing, or like, zirconium; as, zirconic oxide.

zir'con-i-flu'or-ide (zûr'kŏn-Ĭ-flōō'ŏr-īd; -Id), n. Also -id. Chem. A compound formed by the union of zirconium fluoride, ZrF_4, with any of various oxides, $(NH_4)_2ZrF_6$ and $(NH_4)_3ZrF_7$; — called also fluozirconate.

zir-co'ni-um (zĕr-kō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.] Chem. A rather rare element found (in combined form only) in zircon, woehlerite, and certain other minerals, and isolated as a black powder or as a grayish crystalline metallic substance (sp. gr., 4.15). It is quadrivalent, and has both basic and acid properties. Symbol, Zr; at. wt., 90.6.

zircon light. Physics. A light, similar to the calcium light, produced by incandescent zirconia. See ZIRCONIA.

zir'con-oid (zûr'kŏn-oid), n. [zircon + -oid.] Cryst. A double eight-sided pyramid, a form common with tetragonal crystals; — so called because frequent in zircon crystals.

zith'er (zĭth'ẽr), n. [G. zither. See CITTERN.] Music. An instrument having from thirty to forty strings over a shallow sounding box, wine, containing about 10 or 11 per cent of alcohol by volume.

‖ zin'ga-no (tsĭn'gȧ-nō), n.; pl. -NI (-nē). A gypsy.

‖ zin'ga-ro (-rō), n.; pl. -RI (-rē) [It. Cf. ZINCALO.] A gypsy.

Zin'gi-ber (zĭn'jĭ-bẽr), n. [L., ginger.] Bot. Syn. of ZINZIBER.

zin'ka (tsĭn'kȧ), n. [G.] Music. A small cornetlike wind instrument of wood or horn, usually with seven finger holes; — formerly common in Germany.

zink'ic, zink-if'er-ous, zink'i-fy, zink'ite, etc. Vars. of ZINCIC, ZINCIFEROUS, etc.

zink'y (-Ĭ). Var. of ZINCKY.

zin-naz' (-năz'), n. = CHINAR. Obs.

zinn'wald-ite (tsĭn'vălt-īt), n. [From Zinnwald, in Bohemia, where it occurs.] Min. A pale violet, yellow, brown, or dark gray variety of mica containing iron and lithium.

zi-no'ber (zĭ-nō'bẽr), n. [Cf. G. zinnober. See CINNABAR.] = CINNABAR, n., 3. Rare.

zin'sang (zĭn'săng), n. [Error for linsang.] The delundung, or linsang.

Zin'zar (zĭn'zär), n. One of a people of Macedonia and northern Greece, speaking a language akin to the Roumanian.

Zi'on (zī'ŏn), Zi'u (zī'ōō), n. [OHG. Zio.] Tiu. See TYR.

Zi'on-ward (zī'ŏn-wẽrd), adv. Toward Zion; heavenward.

Zi'or (zī'ŏr). Bib.

Zi-pan'gi (zĭ-păn'gĭ), Zi-pan'go (-gō), Zi-pan'gu (-gū). Vars. of CIPANGO.

Ziph (zĭf). Bib.

Zi'phah (zī'fȧ). Bib.

Zi-phi'ī-dæ (zĭ-fĭ'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL. See ZIPHIUS.] Zoöl. The family consisting of the beaked whales, often included in the family Physeteridæ as a subfamily Ziphi'i'næ (zĭ-fĭ-ĭ'nē). — ziphi'i-oid (zĭ-fĭ'ĭ-oid), a. & n.

Ziph'im (zī'fĭm), or Ziph'ims (-ĭmz), n. pl. Bib.

Ziph'i-on (zĭf'ĭ-ŏn). Bib.

Ziph'i-ster'num (zĭf'ĭ-stûr'nŭm), n. = XIPHISTERNUM.

Ziph'ites (zī'fīts), n. pl. Bib.

Ziphi'i-us (-ĭ-ŭs), n. [NL., for Xiphius, fr. Gr. ξιφίας sword-fish, ξίφος sword.] Zoöl. A genus of beaked whales allied to Hyperoödon and Mesoplodon.

Zip'o'ran (zĭf'ō-răn). Bib.

Zip'por (zĭp'pŏr). Bib.

Zip-po'rah (zĭ-pō'rȧ), n. Bib. Daughter of Jethro and wife of Moses.

zir'co-flu'or-ide (zûr'kō-flōō'ŏr-īd; -Id), n. A zirconifluoride.

zir'co-na (zûr'kō-nȧ), n. [NL.] Chem. Zirconia. [Zirconic.

zir-co'ni-an (zĕr-kō'nĭ-ăn), a.

zir'con-if'er-ous (zûr'kŏn-ĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. Containing or yielding zircon or zirconium.

zir'co-no- (zûr'kō-nō-). See ZIRCO-.

zircon syenite. Petrog. A local variety of nephelite syenite containing much zircon.

Z iron. See Z, a.

zith'er-ist, n. A player on the zither.

Zeu-zer'i-dæ (-zĕr'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. Syn. of COSSIDÆ.

Zevs. zevende. † SEVEN, SEVENTH.

zevevald. † SEVENFOLD.

zey'lan-ite (zē'lăn-īt). Var. of CEYLONITE.

Z. G. Abbr. Zoölogical Garden.

zhe. † SHE.

Zhmud (zhmōōd), n. A Lithuanian lowlander; a Samogitian.

zi. † SEE.

Zi'a (zī'ȧ). Bib.

zi-a'met (zĭ-ā'mĕt), n. [Turk. ziāmat, fr. Ar. ziāmah. Cf. ZAIM.] A fief, larger than a timar, granted to a zaim for military service. Obs. or Hist.

Zi'ba (zī'bȧ). Bib.

zib'el-ine, zib'el-line (zĭb'ĕl-ĭn; -īn). [Cf. F. zibeline, It. zibellino. See SABLE.] Of or pertaining to sables.

zib'el-ine, zib'el-line, n. 1. The fur or pelt of a sable. Obs. or R.

2. (pron. -ēn) A kind of soft woolen dress fabric having long silky hairs on the right side.

zib'e-tum (zĭb'ē-tŭm), n. [NL. See ZIBET.] Civet from the zibet.

Zi-do'ni-ans (zĭ-dō'nĭ-ănz), n. pl. Bib. People of Zidon, or Sidon.

ziekle. † SICKLE.

zie'trĭ-sĭ'kite (zē'trĭ-sē'kīt), n. [From Zietrisika, Moldavia, where it is found.] Min. A mineral wax, very like ozocerite.

Zif (zĭf), n. [Heb. ziv.] Bib. Old Hebrew name for IYAR. See JEWISH CALENDAR.

zi-gan'ka (zĭ-găŋ'kȧ), n. [Prob. fr. Russ. tsyganka a gypsy woman.] a A Russian countrydance. b Music for this dance, usually quick and with a drone bass.

zigge. † SAY. [of SIGGER.]

zig'ger, zig'hyr (zĭg'ẽr). Vars. of ZIGGERE.

ziggere. † 1st SAYER.

zinc alkyl. See ZINC METHYL.

zinc amide. A white amorphous substance, $Zn(NH_2)_2$, got by action of ammonia on zinc ethyl.

zinc amyl. See ZINC METHYL.

zinc'ane (zĭŋk'ān), n. Chem. Zinc chloride. Obs.

zinc blende. [Cf. G. zinkblende.] Min. Sphalerite.

zinc bloom. [Cf. G. zinkblumen flowers of zinc, oxide of zinc.] Min. = HYDROZINCITE.

zinc bromide. Chem. A white, crystalline salt, $ZnBr_2$, very deliquescent and soluble.

zinc chromate. A yellow compound, $ZnCrO_4$, used as a pigment under the names zinc chrome, zinc yellow, etc.

zinc dust. See ZINC, 1.

zinc ethyl, zinc ethide. Chem. See ZINC METHYL.

zinc green. Cobalt green.

zinc'i-cin-id. } (-sĭ-nĭd), n. Also -id. A binary compound of zinc. R.

zinc-if'er-ous (zĭŋk-ĭf'ẽr-ŭs; -sĭf'-), a. [zinc + -ferous.] Containing or yielding zinc.

zinck'en-ite (zĭŋ'kĕn-īt). = ZINKENITE.

zinc-og'ra-fy. Zincography.

zinc'oid (zĭŋk'oid), a. [zinc + -oid.] Pert. to or like zinc; — of the electricity of the zincous plate connected with a copper plate in a voltaic circle; also, noting the positive pole. Obs.

zinc'o-lith. (zĭŋ'kō-lĭth), n.; pl. [zinco- + -lith.] A white pigment consisting of zinc sulphide and barium sulphate.

zinc'o-po'lar, a. Elec. Of or pert. to the zincous pole. Obs.

zinc propyl. See ZINC METHYL.

zinc'o-type, n. = ZINCOGRAPH.

zinc pole. Elec. Of a voltaic cell, the negative pole.

zinc spar. Smithsonite.

zinc spinel. Min. Gahnite.

zinc'um (zĭŋ'kŭm), n. [NL.] Chem. Zinc.

zinc vitriol. Zinc sulphate.

zinc'y (zĭŋk'Ĭ). Var. of ZINCKY.

zinc yellow. See ZINC CHROMATE.

zin'fan-del' (zĭn'făn-dĕl'), n. A red or white dry California set horizontally before the performer. A fretted finger board at one side lies under some of the strings, on which the melody is played by a plectrum on the right thumb, these strings being stopped with the left hand. The remaining strings are tuned in fourths and plucked by the old lute-shaped cithern.

Zi-za'ni-a (zĭ-zā'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. L. zizanium darnel, cockle, Gr. ζιζάνιον.] Bot. A genus of tall monœcious grasses having long flat leaves and ample panicles composed of 1-flowered spikelets. Z. aquatica, the only species, is the wild rice or Indian rice.

‖ zi'zith (zē'zĭth), n. pl. [Heb. tsitsith.] The tassels of twisted cords or threads on the corners of the upper garment worn by strict Jews. See TALLITH b. The Hebrew for this word is translated in both the Authorized and Revised Versions (Deut. xxii. 12) by the word "fringes."

Ziz'y-phus (zĭz'ĭ-fŭs), n. [L., jujube tree. See JUJUBE.] Bot. A large genus of spiny rhamnaceous shrubs having triple-veined leaves and small cymose flowers with a two-celled ovary. They are natives chiefly of tropical America and Asia. Many bear edible fruits, and others are cultivated for ornament or as hedge plants. See JUJUBE, 1; LOTUS, n., 1; CHRIST'S-THORN a.

-zo'a (-zō'ȧ). A Modern Latin suffix from Greek ζῷα, pl. of ζῷον an animal, used in names of zoölogical groups; as in Mesozoa, Protozoa, Trochozoa, etc.

zo-an'thro-py (zō-ăn'thrŏ-pĭ), n. [Gr. ζῷον animal + ἄνθρωπος man.] Med. A monomania in which one believes himself changed into an animal and acts like one.

Zo-an'thus (-thŭs), n. [NL.; Gr. ζῷον an animal + ἄνθος flower.] Zoöl. A genus of Actinozoa, including numerous species, found mostly in tropical seas. The zooids, or polyps, resemble small, elongated, somewhat leathery sea anemones united together at their bases by fleshy stolons, and thus forming extensive groups. The tentacles are small and bright-colored.

Zoanthus (Z. solanderi). a A Polyp expanded; b One contracted; c Section of a Polyp; s s Stolons.

zo-a'ri-um (zō-ā'rĭ-ŭm; 115), n.; pl. ZOARIA (-ȧ). [NL., fr. Gr. ζωάριον, dim. of ζῷον an animal.] Zoöl. The aggregate of individuals, or polypides, in a compound polyzoan; a polypary. — zo-a'ri-al (-ăl), a.

zo'di-ac (zō'dĭ-ăk), n. [F. zodiaque, fr. L. zodiacus, Gr. ζωδιακός (sc. κύκλος), prop., circle of animals, fr. ζῴδιον, dim. of ζῷον an animal, akin to ζωός living, ζῆν to live.] 1. Astron. a An imaginary belt in the heavens, 16° broad, including the paths of the moon and all the principal planets and, as its middle line, the ecliptic, or sun's path. The zodiac has twelve divisions, or signs. See SIGN, n., 8. b A figure representing the signs, symbols, etc., of the zodiac. c By extension, the belt or region of the sky within which the moon or a planet moves; as, the lunar zodiac; the zodiac of Ceres, etc.

2. A circuit; zone; hence, a girdle. Rare. Milton.

zo-di'a-cal (zō-dī'ȧ-kăl), a. [Cf. F. zodiacal.] Astron. Of, pert. to, or within, the zodiac; as, zodiacal planets.

zodiacal light, a nebulous light seen in the west after twilight and in the east before dawn. It has an elongated triangular form and lies along the ecliptic, its base being on the horizon, and its apex at varying altitudes. It is best seen in the tropics the year round, and in middle latitudes on spring evenings and autumn mornings. It is supposed to be due to sunlight reflected from multitudes of meteors revolving about the sun nearly in the plane of the ecliptic. — z. parallel, Astrol., the configuration of two heavenly bodies, esp. planets, of equal declination.

zo-ë'a (zō-ē'ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ζωή life.] Zoöl. An early larval form of certain decapod crustaceans, esp. of crabs and certain Anomura. It commonly precedes the megalops. It is distinguished by the relatively large cephalothorax (which commonly bears three or four long spines), the conspicuous eyes, the relatively large and fringed antennæ and mouth parts (with which it swims), the rudimentary thoracic appendages, and the long slender abdomen on which the swimmerets are small or wanting. — zo-ë'al (zō-ē'ăl), a.

Zoëa of a Crab. a Antennule; a' Antenna; b, c Mouth Parts; d Rudimentary Legs; s Rudimentary Swimmerets.

zo'e-trope (zō'ē-trōp), n. [Gr. ζωή life + τρόπος turning, fr. τρέπειν to turn.] An optical toy in which figures on the inside of a revolving cylinder are viewed through slits in its circumference, and appear like a single animated figure. — zo'e-trop'ic (-trŏp'ĭk), a.

Zo'har (zō'hăr), n. [Heb. zōhar light, splendor.] A Jewish cabalistic book introduced into Spain in the 13th century by the cabalistic writer Moses de León, who attributed it to Simeon ben Yohai, a 2d-century Jewish teacher. Under the form of a commentary on the Pentateuch, it contains a complete cabalistic theosophy, treating of God, the cosmogony and cosmology of the universe, the soul, sin, redemption, etc. Its contents indicate that it is the work of many authors, periods, and civilizations.

zo-ï'a-tri'a (zō-ĭ'ȧ-trī'ȧ; zō'ĭ-ȧt'rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; Gr. ζῷον an animal + -ιατρία.] The treatment of the diseases and injuries of the lower animals; zoïatrics.

Zo-il'e-an (zō-ĭl'ē-ăn; zō'ĭ-lē'ăn), a. Having the characteristics of Zoilus, a bitter, envious, unjust Greek critic, who lived about 270 years before Christ.

Zo'il-ism (zō'ĭl-ĭz'm), n. Likeness to Zoilus in style or manner; carping criticism; detraction.—Zo'il-list (-ĭst), n.

Bring candid eyes unto the perusal of men's works, and let not Zoilism or detraction blast well-intended labors. Sir T. Browne.

zois'ite (zois'ĭt), n. [After Baron Zois von Edelstein (1747–1819), from whom Werner received his first specimens.] Min. An orthorhombic mineral allied to epidote, in prismatic crystals of various colors (grayish, brown, green, rose) and also massive. It is a basic orthosilicate of calcium and aluminium, $HCa_2Al_3Si_3O_{13}$, the aluminium being sometimes replaced by iron. H., 6–6.5. Sp. gr., 3.25–3.37.

zo'ism (zō'ĭz'm), n. [Gr. ζωή life + -ισμ.] 1. Reverence for animal life or belief in animal powers and influences, as among savages.

2. Biol. A doctrine, now discarded, that the phenomena of life are due to a peculiar vital principle; the theory of vital force.

— zo'ist, n. — zo-is'tic (zō-ĭs'tĭk), a.

Zo'la-esque' (zō'lȧ-ĕsk'), a. In the style of Zola.

Zo'la-ism (zō'lȧ-ĭz'm), n. The literary theories and practices of the French novelist Émile Zola (1840–1902); naturalism (which see, 4 b), esp. in a derogatory sense. — Zo'la-ist, n. — Zo'la-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a. — Zo'la-ize (-īz), v.

Zöll'ner's law (tsŭl'nĕrz). Astron. A formula, or law, expressing the time of axial rotation of the sun in different strata, or latitudes, derived by Johann Karl Friedrich Zöllner (1834–82), German physicist.

Zöll'ner's lines. [See ZÖLLNER'S LAW.] Parallel lines made to appear to converge or diverge by oblique intersections.

Zöllner's Lines.

‖ Zoll'ver-ein' (tsŏl'fĕr-īn'), n. [G.; zoll duty + verein union.] [also l. c.] A customs union; specif., any of the several customs unions successively formed under the leadership of Prussia among certain German states for establishing free trade among themselves and a common tariff on imports, exports, and goods in transit. In 1834 one was established including most of the chief German states except Austria. In 1867 a closer organized union was formed, the administration of which was finally merged in that of the new German Empire of 1871.

‖ zo'na (zō'nȧ), n.; pl. ZONÆ (-nē). [L., a girdle. See ZONE.] 1. A zone or band; a girdle; a layer.

2. Herpes zoster. See HERPES.

zo'na ar'cu-a'ta (är'kū-ā'tȧ) [L. arcuata bent, bowed], Anat., the inner of the two longitudinal areas into which the basilar membrane of the cochlea is divided. It supports the organ of Corti.— z. den-ti'cu-la'ta (dĕn-tĭk'ū-lā'tȧ) [L. denticulata denticulate], Anat., the zona arcuata together with the limbus of the spiral lamina. — z. or-bi'cu-la'ris (ôr-bĭk'ū-lā'rĭs; 115) [L. orbicularis circular], Anat., a set of circular fibers in the capsular ligament of the hip joint, which pass from the deep surface of the iliofemoral ligament around the neck of the femur.—z. pec'ti-na'ta (pĕk'tĭ-nā'tȧ) [L. pectinata shaped like a comb], Anat., the outer longitudinal division of the basilar membrane of the cochlea. — z. pel-lu'ci-da (pĕ-lū'sĭ-dȧ) [L. pellucida transparent], Embryol., the outer, transparent, more or less elastic layer or envelope of an ovum. It is usually traversed by numerous radiating canals. — z. ra'di-a'ta (rā'dĭ-ā'tȧ) [NL. radiata: see RADIATA], Embryol., the zona pellucida, esp. when the radiating canals are unusually distinct. — z. tec'ta (tĕk'tȧ). [L. tecta covered.] Anat. = ZONA ARCUATA.

zon'al (zōn'ăl), a. [L. zonalis.] Of or pertaining to a zone; having the form of a zone or zones.

zonal equation, Cryst., the mathematical relation which belongs to all the planes of a zone, and expresses their common position with reference to the axes. — z. harmonic, Math., the coefficient of z^m in the development of $(1\text{-}2xcos\theta + Z^2)^{-\frac{1}{2}}$ in rising powers of z; — denoted by $P^m(\mu)$, where $\mu = \cos\theta$. — zonal structure, Cryst., a structure characterized by the arrangements of color, inclusions, etc., of a crystal in parallel or concentric layers, which usually follow the outline of the crystal, and mark the changes that have taken place during its growth. — z., or serial, symmetry, Biol., symmetry in which the segments or metameres of the body are disposed in a zonal manner one after the other in a longitudinal axis, as in earthworms; — sometimes called metamerism. — z. view, Bot., that view of a diatom in which the zone, or girdle, is presented to the eye.

zo'nar (zō'när), n. Also zon'nar. [NGr. ζωνάριον a girdle, fr. Gr. ζωνάριον, dim. of ζώνη a girdle. See ZONE.] A belt, or girdle, which the Christians and Jews of the Levant were obliged to wear to distinguish them from Mohammedans.

Zo-na'ri-a (zō-nā'rĭ-ȧ; 115), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. In Huxley's classification, a primary division of deciduate mammals consisting of those having a zonary placenta. It includes the carnivores and certain ungulates. It is now regarded as an unnatural group.

zon'a-ry (zōn'ȧ-rĭ), a. a Of, pertaining to, or like, a zone; zonal. b Of or pert. to the Zonaria.

zonary placenta. Zoöl. See PLACENTA, 1.

zon'ate (zōn'āt), a. a Marked with zones; ringed or belted. b Bot. Arranged in a single row, as certain tetraspores.

zo-na'tion (zō-nā'shŭn), n. a State of being zoned or zonate. b Biogeog. Arrangement or distribution in zones.

zone (zōn), n. [F. zone, L. zona, Gr. ζώνη; akin to ζωννύναι to gird, Lith. jůsta a girdle, jůsti to gird.] 1. A girdle; cincture; belt. Obs. or Poetic. Dryden.

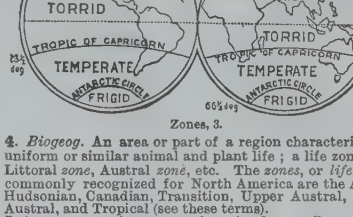
2. Any encircling band, stripe, or girdle; as, a zone of trees; a zone around an animal or plant; more broadly, any encircling line, path, course, or the like; circuit. "The sun . . . in the great zone of heaven." Milton.

3. Any of five great divisions of the earth's surface with respect to latitude and temperature: the torrid zone, extending from tropic to tropic 46° 56′, or 23° 28′ on each side of the equator; two temperate, or variable, zones, situated between the tropics and the polar circles, which are 23° 27′ from the poles; and two frigid zones, between the polar circles and the poles.



Zones, 3.

4. Biogeog. An area or part of a region characterized by uniform or similar animal and plant life; a life zone; as, Littoral zone, Austral zone, etc. The zones, or life zones, commonly recognized for North America are the Arctic, Hudsonian, Canadian, Transition, Upper Austral, Lower Austral, and Tropical (see these terms).

5 An area or region more or less clearly set off or characterized as distinct from surrounding or adjoining parts; as, the wheat zone; the zone of free trade; on the Isthmus of Panama, the Canal Zone; in a metalliferous region, the mineral zone; a zone of influence.

6. Geol. See GEOLOGY, Chart.

7. Cryst. A series of faces whose intersection lines with each other are all parallel.

8. Math. The portion of the surface of a sphere included between two parallel planes; the part of a surface of revolution between two planes perpendicular to the axis.

9. Railroad Econ. a The aggregate of stations, in whatsoever direction or on whatsoever line of railroad, situated between certain maximum and minimum limits from a point at which a shipment of traffic originates. See ZONE TARIFF. b Any circular or ring-shaped area within which the street-car companies make no differences of fare.

zone of clouds, Meteor., a belt of clouds prevailing over the ocean near the equator. — z. of fire, Mil., the belt of terrain brought under fire from any defensive position; — sometimes called zone of defense. — z. of flow or flowage, Geol., the subsurface part of the earth in which the breaking of rocks is prevented by pressure, and all deformation is by a sort of flow. It includes the larger part of the earth, and underlies the zone of fracture, or that part of the earth's crust in which deformation may result in fracture. Between the zone of fracture and the zone of flow there is a zone of combined fracture and flow, where the rocks may break or flow according to the conditions of deformation, the strength of the materials, etc. — z. of influence or operations. Internat. Law. See SPHERE OF INFLUENCE.

zone, v. t.; ZONED (zōnd); ZON'ING (zōn'ĭng). To encircle or embrace; to include within a zone or zones; to mark off into zones. — v. i. To be marked off into zones; to form a zone or zones.

zone axis. Cryst. A straight line through the center of a crystal, to which all faces of a given zone are parallel.

zoned (zōnd), a. 1. Wearing a zone, or girdle. Pope. 2. Having zones, or concentric bands; striped; zonate.

zone reticule. Astron. A reticule of mica or thin glass with graduated divisions corresponding to equal intervals of right ascension, and others at right angles to them, representing equal intervals of declination.

zone tariff, zone system. A tariff or system, chiefly used in Austria-Hungary, under which passenger tickets read to any station within certain distance limits, or zones, the same ticket being good in all directions and on all lines so long as the maximum distance is not exceeded.

zo'no-pla-cen'tal (zō'nō-plȧ-sĕn'tȧl), a. [zone + placental.] a Having a zonary placenta, as some mammals. b Of or pert. to the Zonoplacentalia, or Zonaria.

zon'ule (zōn'ūl), n. [L. zonula.] A little zone, belt, or girdle; a zonula. — zonule of Zinn (tsĭn), Anat., the suspensory ligament of the crystalline lens of the eye.

zoo (zō), n. A zoölogical garden or collection; — a humorous or colloquial abbreviation applied originally to the Zoological Gardens in London.

zo'ö- (zō'ō-). Combining form from Greek ζῷον, an animal; as in zoögenic, zoölogy, etc.

zo'ö-chem'is-try (zō'ō-kĕm'ĭs-trĭ), n. [zoö- + chemistry.] Animal chemistry; esp., the description of the chemical compounds entering into the composition of the animal body, in distinction from biochemistry. — zo'ö-chem'i-cal (-kĕm'ĭ-kȧl), a.

zo'ö-chlo-rel'la (-klō-rĕl'ȧ), n.; pl. -LLÆ (-ē). [NL. dim., fr. zoö- + Gr. χλωρός green.] Zoöl. One of the small green granule-like bodies found in the interior of certain stentors, hydras, and other invertebrates.

zo-ög'a-my (zō-ŏg'ȧ-mĭ), n. Zoöl. The sexual reproduction of animals. — zo-ög'a-mous (-mŭs), a.

zo'ö-ge-og'ra-phy (zō'ō-jē-ŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [zoö- + geography.] The study or description of the geographical distribution of animals; esp., the determination of the land and marine areas characterized by special groups of animals and the study of the causes and significance of such groups. It has important bearings on evolution, variation, paleontology, and other biological studies. Recent zoögeographers divide the land areas of the world into regions or realms, and these into subregions, provinces, subprovinces, and zones, all of which are often depicted on special maps. Cf. PHYTOGEOGRAPHY.

zo'ö-glœ'a (-glē'ȧ), n. [NL.; zoö- + Gr. γλοιός a glutinous substance.] Bacteriol. A colony or mass of bacteria embedded in a mucilaginous or jellylike substance formed by the swelling of the cell membranes through absorption of water. This development occurs regularly in the life history of most species under certain conditions, and is hence called the zoœlœa stage. The term is sometimes extended to certain of the lower algæ. Cf. PALMELLA.

zo-ög'ra-phy (zō-ŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [zoö- + -graphy: cf. F. zoographie.] A description of animals, their forms and habits. — zo'ö-graph'ic (zō'ō-grăf'ĭk), -graph'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl), a.

zo'oid (zō'oid), zo-oi'dal (zō-oi'dȧl), a. [zoö- + -oid.] Biol. Pertaining to, or resembling, an animal.

zo'oid, n. 1. Biol. An organic body or cell having locomotion, as a spermatic cell, or spermatozoid.

2. Zoöl. a An animal produced by fission, proliferation, strobilation, or some similar method, and not by direct sexual methods, and so having an equivocal individuality; a more or less independent product of nonsexual reproduction. The term is usually applied to any one of the persons of a compound organism, as a hydroid, coral, or polyzoan colony, though by some it is restricted to those persons in such a colony that lack the mouth and digestive organs. b Also, any of the individuals which, in alternation of generations, come between the products of true sexual reproduction, as the free-swimming medusa of a hydroid colony, a jellyfish, or the parthenogenetically produced offspring of an aphid.

zo'ŏl-log'i-cal (zō'ŏ-lŏj'ĭ-kȧl), a. [Cf. F. zoologique.] Of or pertaining to zoölogy, or the science of animals.

zo-ŏl'o-gist (zō-ŏl'ō-jĭst), n. [Cf. F. zoologiste.] One who is well versed in zoölogy.

zo-ŏl'o-gize (-jīz), v. i.; -GIZED (-jīzd); -GIZ'ING (-jīz'ĭng). To study zoölogy; esp., to collect animals for study.

zo-ŏl'o-gy (-jĭ), n.; pl. -GIES (-jĭz). [zoö- + -logy: cf. F. zoologie. See ZODIAC.] 1. The science of animals; that division (coördinate with botany) of biology which deals with the animal kingdom. See ANIMAL, n., 1. Zoölogy has as its main divisions comparative anatomy, comparative physiology, zoögeography, paleozoölogy, cytology, embryology, taxonomy, economic zoölogy, etiology, and various other sciences in whole or in part, and there are numerous minor divisions dealing with particular groups of animals, as conchology, carcinology, entomology, ichthyology, herpetology, ornithology, and mammalogy. As a science zoölogy dates from Aristotle (384–322 B. C.), who proposed a rough classification of animals. The science made no advance until the 16th century, when it was revived principally through the work of Vesalius and Gesner. In the 17th century Harvey's study of the circulation of the blood, Malpighi's discoveries with the microscope, and John Ray's limitation of the term species were the most noteworthy steps of progress. In the 18th century Linnæus established the binomial system of nomenclature (see NOMENCLATURE), and recognized groups higher than species. Early in the 19th century Cuvier worked along the lines of comparative anatomy and paleontology and Lamarck enunciated his theory of evolution (see LAMARCKISM). The discovery of the animal cell by Schwann and important embryological work by von Baer and Kölliker belong to this period. In 1856 Charles Darwin published his theory of evolution by natural selection (see DARWINISM), which was ably supported by Wallace, Huxley, Spencer, Haeckel, Weismann, and many others until the old idea of the fixity of species was abandoned and zoölogy took on its modern aspect, in which classification has become the expression of phylogeny and the investigation of evolutionary theories and questions of heredity have been placed on an experimental basis.

2. A treatise on zoölogy.

zo'ö-mor'phism (-fĭz'm), n. 1. The transformation of men into beasts. Rare. Smart.

2. The quality of representing or using animal forms; as, zoömorphism in ornament.

3. The representation of God, or of gods, in the form, or with the attributes, of the lower animals.

To avoid the error of anthropomorphism, we fall into the vastly greater, and more absurd, error of zoömorphism. Mivart.

zo'ŏn (zō'ŏn), n.; pl. ZOA (-ȧ). [NL., fr. Gr. ζῷον an animal.] Zoöl. a An animal which is the sole product of a single egg; — opposed to zooid. H. Spencer. b Any of the perfectly developed individuals of a compound animal. — zo'ŏn-al (zō'ŏn-ȧl), a.

-zoön. A combining form from Greek ζῷον, an animal.

zo'ö-no'ses (zō'ō-nō'sēz), n. pl. [NL.; zoö- + Gr. νόσος disease.] Diseases communicable from animals to man.

zo'ö-phar'ma-cy (-fär'mȧ-sĭ), n. Veterinary pharmacy.

zo-ŏph'i-list (zō-ŏf'ĭ-lĭst), n. [zoö- + Gr. φίλος loving.] A lover of animals. Southey.

zo-ŏph'i-lous (zō-ŏf'ĭ-lŭs), a. [zoö- + -philous.] Animal-loving; specif., Bot., adapted to pollination by animals other than insects. Cf. ANEMOPHILOUS, ENTOMOPHILOUS, etc.

zo-ŏph'i-ly (zō-ŏf'ĭ-lĭ), n. Love of animals.

zo'ö-pho'bi-a (zō'ō-fō'bĭ-ȧ), n. [zoö- + -phobia.] Med. Morbid fear of animals.

zo'ö-phor'ic (-fôr'ĭk), a. [Gr. ζωοφόρος; ζῷον an animal + φέρειν to bear.] Bearing or supporting the figure of one or more men or animals; as, a zoöphoric column.

zo-ŏph'o-rus (zō-ŏf'ō-rŭs), n.; pl. -RI (-rī). [L., fr. Gr. ζωοφόρος. See ZOÖPHORIC.] Class. Arch. A frieze having continuous relief sculptures of men or animals or both.

zo'ö-phyte (zō'ō-fīt), n. [F. zoophyte, Gr. ζωόφυτον; ζῷον animal + φυτόν plant. See ZODIAC; PHYTO-.] Zoöl. Any of numerous invertebrate animals more or less resembling plants in appearance, or mode of growth, as the corals, gorgonians, sea anemones, hydroids, polyzoans, sponges, etc., esp. any of those that form compound colonies of a branched or treelike form, as many corals and hydroids; one of the Zoöphyta. — zo'ö-phyt'ic (-fĭt'ĭk), zo'ö-phyt'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl), a. — zo-ŏph'y-toid (zō-ŏf'ĭ-toid), a.

zo'ö-plas'ty (zō'ō-plȧs'tĭ), n. [zoö- + -plasty.] Surg. Act or process of grafting animal tissue into the human body. — zo'ö-plas'tic (-plȧs'tĭk), a.

zo'ö-spo-ran'gi-um (zō'ō-spō-răn'jĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -SPORANGIA (-ȧ). [NL.] Bot. A spore case, or sporangium with zoöspores. — zo'ö-spo-ran'gi-al (-ȧl), a.

zo'ö-spore (zō'ō-spōr; 201), n. Called also swarm spore. 1. Bot. An asexual spore with one or more slender cilia, by the vibration of which it swims. Zoöspores are produced by many green, and by some olive-brown, algæ. In certain species they are divided into the larger megazoöspores and the smaller microzoöspores. Loosely, a zoögonidium or a planogamete. See SPORE, GAMETE, GONIDIUM.

2. Zoöl. One of the minute motile flagellate or amœboid bodies into which the protoplasm of a sporocyst divides.

zo'ö-spor'ic (-spŏr'ĭk), a. Of or pertaining to zoöspores; of the nature of, or resembling, a zoöspore.

zo'ö-the'ism (zō'ō-thē'ĭz'm), n. Belief in animal gods. — zo'ö-the'ist, n. — zo'ö-the-is'tic (-thē-ĭs'tĭk), a.

zo-ŏt'o-my (zō-ŏt'ō-mĭ), n. [zoö- + -tomy.] Zoöl. The anatomy of animals, esp. of animals other than man. — zo'ö-tom'ic (zō'ō-tŏm'ĭk), zo'ö-tom'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl), a. — zo'ö-tom'i-cal-ly, adv. — zo-ŏt'o-mist (zō-ŏt'ō-mĭst), n.

zo'ö-tox'in (zō'ō-tŏk'sĭn), n. A yellow pigment found in the feathers of certain birds.

‖ zop'po (tsŏp'pō), masc. } a. [It.] Music. Lit., "limping;" ‖ zop'pa (tsŏp'pȧ), fem. } hence, alternatingly with and without syncopation; — as, ‖ al'la zop'pa (ȧl'lȧ), designating a scheme of duple time with a syncopation in the middle of each measure. Thus:

zor'il (zôr'ĭl), n. [Cf. F. zorille, Sp. zorrilla, zorillo, dim. of zorra, zorro, a fox. Cf. ZORILLA.] A South African musteline mammal (Zorilla zorilla or Ictonyx capensis) about the size and form of the common polecat. It resemzone'less, a. See -LESS.

zone plate. Physics A plate with alternately opaque and transparent annuli, diffracting like a condensing lens. [Obs.

zon'ic (zŏn'ĭk), n. Belt; zone.

zo-nif'er-ous (zō-nĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. zona zone + E. -ferous.] Having a zone or zones; zoned.

Zo-ni'tes (zō-nī'tēz), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ζώνη a girdle.] Zoöl. A widely distributed genus of small terrestrial snails, having a thin, depressed shell with sharp peristome. It is variously referred to the families Limacidæ, Helicidæ, or Vitrinidæ, or by some is made the type of a family, Zo-nit'i-dæ (zō-nĭt'ĭ-dē). — zo-nit'id (-ĭd), a. & n.

zon'nar. Var. of ZONAR.

zo'no-chlo'rite (zō'nō-klō'rīt), n. [Gr. ζώνη a girdle + χλωρός green; — in allusion to its structure.] Min. An impure variety of prehnite, occurring in green pebbles of banded structure.

zo'no-cil'i-ate (zō'nō-sĭl'ĭ-ĕt), a. [zone + ciliate.] Zoöl. Having a zone, or band, of cilia, as certain annelid larvæ.

zo'noid (zō'noid), a. [Gr. ζωοειδής.] Like a zone. Rare.

zo'no-lim-net'ic (zō'nō-lĭm-nĕt'ĭk), a. [zone + limnetic.] Zoöl. Pert. to a definite zone in depth; — said of certain freshwater plankton animals.

Zo'no-plac'en-ta'li-a (-plăs'ĕn-tā'lĭ-ȧ), n. pl. [NL.] = ZONARIA.

zo'no-trich'i-a (-trĭk'ĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; Gr. ζώνη girdle + θρίξ, τριχός, hair.] Zoöl. See CROWN SPARROW.

zo'nu-la (zō'nū-lȧ; zŏn'ū-lȧ), n. [L.] A zonule. — zo'nu-lar (-lẽr), a. — zo'nu-la ci'li-a'ris (sĭl'ĭ-ā'rĭs; 115). = ZONULE OF ZINN. [zonule.]

zo'nu-let (zō'nū-lĕt), n. A zonule.

Zo-nu'ri-dæ (zō-nū'rĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. ζώνη a girdle + οὐρά tail.] Zoöl. A family of pleurodont lizards of southern and tropical Africa and Madagascar, having a short, feebly protractile tongue and with osteoderms at least on the head. The type genus is Zo-nu'rus (-rŭs). — zo-nu'roid (-roid), a. & n.

zo'ö-blast, n. [zoö- + -blast.] An animal cell. [A zoöspore. Obs.

zo'ö-cau'lon (zō'ō-kô'lŏn), n. [NL.; zoö- + Gr. καυλός stalk.] = ZOÖDENDRUM.

zoöchem. Abbr. Zoöchemical; zoöchemistry.

zo'ö-chem'ic (zō'ō-kĕm'ĭk), n. [zoö- + Gr. χημία alchemy.] Animal chemistry; zoöchemistry.

zo'ö-coe'no-cyte. n. Bot. One of the peculiar reproductive bodies in the alga Vaucheria. It is a ciliated coenocyte.

zo'ö-cul'ture, n. The domesticating and breeding of animals.

zo'ö-cur'rent, n. Zoöl. An oceanic current in which great quantities of planktonic organisms are found.

zo'ö-cyst (zō'ō-sĭst), n. Zoöl. = SPOROCYST, 1 a (1). — zo'ö-cys'tic (-sĭs'tĭk), a.

zo'ö-cy'ti-um (zō'ō-sī'shĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. ZOÖCYTIA (-ȧ). [NL.; zoö- + Gr. κύτος a hollow vessel.] Zoöl. The common gelatinous support, often branched, of certain social Infusoria. — zo'ö-cy'tial (-shĭ'ȧl), a.

zo'ö-de-a'ri-um (zō'ō-dē-ā'rĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -DRIA (-ȧ). [NL.; zoö- + Gr. δένδρον a tree.] Zoöl. The branched, and often treelike, support of the colonies of certain Infusoria.

zo'ö-den'drum (zō'ō-dĕn'drŭm), n. [NL.; zoö- + Gr. δένδρον a tree.] = ZOÖCAULON.

zo'ö-dy-nam'ic, a. [zoö- + -ic.] Of or pert. to zoödynamics.

zo'ö-dy-nam'ics, n. [zoö- + dynamics.] The science which treats of the vital powers of animals; animal physiology.

zo'ö-ec'i-um (zō'ō-ĕs'ĭ-ŭm), n. [zoö- + -ecium.] = ZOÖCIUM.

zo'ö-ec'tine (zō'ō-ĕk'tĭn), n. [zoö- + Gr. ἐκτός outside.] Zoöl. = ZOÖNITE. [ozoölogy.

zo'ö-pa'le-on-tol'o-gy, n. Paleozoölogy.

zo'ö-pan-the'on (zō'ō-păn-thē'ŏn; -păn'thē-ŏn; cf. PANTHEON), n. A pantheon of deities having animal forms. Rare.

zo-ŏp'a-thy (zō-ŏp'ȧ-thĭ), n. [zoö- + -pathy.] Zoöl. = ZOÖPATHOLOGY.

zo-ŏp'er-y (-ẽr-ĭ), n. [zoö- + Gr. πεῖρα trial.] Zoöl. Experimentation on the lower animals.

zo-ŏph'a-gan (-gȧn), n. — zo-ŏph'a-gous (-gŭs), a.

Ethnol. Imitative of an animal or animal organ or part.

zo'ö-morph, n. [zoö- + -morph.] A work of aboriginal art having the form of an animal. Rare.

zo'ö-mor'phy (zō'ō-môr'fĭ), n. Zoömorphism.

zo'ön-e-ryth'rin (zō'ŏn-ē-rĭth'rĭn; -ĕr-ĭth'), n. Zoöerythrin.

zo-ŏn'ic (zō-ŏn'ĭk), a. [Gr. ζῷον an animal: cf. F. zoonique.] 1. Of or pert. to animals; got from animal substances.

2. Acetic. Rare.

zo'ö-nite (zō'ō-nīt), n. Zoöl. One of the body segments of an articulate or vertebrate animal.

zo'ö-no'mi-a (-nō'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] = ZOÖNOMY.

zo-ŏn'o-my (zō-ŏn'ō-mĭ), n. [zoö- + Gr. νόμος a law: cf. F. zoonomie.] The laws of animal life; the science treating of the causes and relations of the phenomena of animal life. — zo'ö-nom'ic (zō'ō-nŏm'ĭk), a. — zo-ŏn'o-mist (zō-ŏn'ō-mĭst), n.

zo'ö-no-sol'o-gy (zō'ō-nō-sŏl'ō-jĭ), n. Zoöl. Zoöpathology.

zo'ö-nule (zō'ō-nūl), n. [Dim. fr. Gr. ζῷον an animal.] Zoöl. = ZOÖNITE.

zo'ö-par'a-site (-ō'pär'ȧ-sīt), n. Zoöl. Any parasitic animal.

zo-ŏp'a-thy (zō-ŏp'ȧ-thĭ), n. [zoö- + -pathy.] Zoöl. = ZOÖPATHOLOGY.

zo-ŏp'er-y (-ẽr-ĭ), n. [zoö- + Gr. πεῖρα trial.] Zoöl. Experimentation on the lower animals.

zo'ö-phore (zō'ō-fôr), n. A zoöphorus.

zo'ö-phys'ics (-fĭz'ĭks), n. Zoöl. Zoölogy which relates to the physical structure and uses of the organs of animals. — zo'ö-phys'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl), a.

zo'ö-phys'i-ol'o-gy, n. Zoöl. The physiology of animals as distinguished from human beings.

Zo-ŏph'y-ta (zō-ŏf'ĭ-tȧ), n. pl. [NL. See ZOÖPHYTE.] Zoöl. In many older classifications, an extensive artificial and heterogeneous group of invertebrates. It commonly included all or many of the forms now regarded as coelenterates, sponges, polyzoans, echinoderms, protozoans, and worms, but by some more recent writers has been restricted to coelenterates (including sponges), or to Actinozoa.

zo'ö-phy-tol'o-gy (zō'ō-fĭ-tŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [zoophyte + -logy.] The natural history of zoöphytes. — zo'ö-phy-to-log'i-cal (-fĭ'tō-lŏj'ĭ-kȧl), a. — zo'ö-phy-tol'o-gist (-fĭ-tŏl'ō-jĭst), n.

zo'ö-plank'ton, n. Zoöl. That portion of the plankton which consists of animals.

zo'ö-prax'i-scope (zō'ō-prăk'sĭ-skōp), n. [zoö- + Gr. πρᾶξις a doing + -scope.] An early form of cinematograph.

zo-ŏp'si-a (zō-ŏp'sĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; zoö- + -opsia.] = ZOÖSCOPY.

zo'ö-sper'mi-um (zō'ō-spûr'mĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -MIA (-ȧ). [NL.] = ZOÖSPERM.

zo'ö-spo-range' (zō'ō-spō-rānj'), n. A zoösporangium.

zo'ö-spo-ran'gi-o-phore' (-răn'jĭ-ō-fōr'), n. Bot. A sporangiophore which bears zoösporangia.

zo'ö-spo-rif'er-ous (-spō-rĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [zoöspore + -ferous.] Biol. Producing zoöspores.

zo'ö-tax'y (zō'ō-tăk'sĭ), n. [zoö- + -taxy.] Zoological taxonomy; systematic zoölogy.

zo'ö-tech'nic (-tĕk'nĭk), zo'ö-tech'nics (-tĕk'nĭks), zo'ö-tech'ny (zō'ō-tĕk'nĭ), n. Zoöl. The breeding and domestication of animals, scientifically viewed.

zo'ö-tech'nic (-tĕk'nĭk), a. Of or pert. to arts or artifacts using, or derived from, animal products. Rare.

zo'ö-the'ci-um (-thē'shĭ-ŭm; -sĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -CIA (-ȧ). [NL.; zoö- + Gr. θήκιον, dim. of θήκη box.] = ZOÖCYTIUM.

zo'ö-thome (zō'ō-thōm), n. [zoö- + Gr. θωμός heap.] Zoöl. A group of zooids of a compound anthozoan or living coral mass.

zo-ŏ'tic (zō-ŏt'ĭk), a. [Gr. ζῷον animal.] Containing organic remains; — of rock or soil.

zo'ö-trope (zō'ō-trōp). Var. of ZOETROPE.

zoo'zoo' (zōō'zōō'), n. [Of imitative origin.] The ringdove. Local, Eng.

Zo'phah (zō'fȧ). Bib.

Zo'phar (-fär), Bib. One of Job's three friends.

Zo'phi-el (zō'fĭ-ĕl), n. [Cf. Heb. Tsophiel, lit., God sees.] In Milton's "Paradise Lost," an angelic scout.

Zo'que (sō'kĕ; 268), n. An Indian of the chief tribe of the Zoquean stock.

zor'gite (zôr'gīt), n. [From Zorge in the Hartz Mountains.] Min. A lead-gray selenide of lead and copper. Sp. gr., 7–7.5.

zor'go. ✝ SORGO.

bles the American skunks in color and markings and in secreting an offensive fluid. An allied species (Z. frenata) inhabits Egypt. Called also Cape polecat.

Zo'ro-as'tri-an (zō'rō-ăs'trĭ-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to Zoroaster or his religious system. — n. A follower of Zoroaster; one who accepts Zoroastrianism.

Zo'ro-as'tri-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n. The religion of Persia previous to the conversion of the Persians to Mohammedanism. It is traditionally derived from its great prophet, Zoroaster or Zarathustra (fl. ab. 1000 B. C.), and its sacred literature is the Zend-Avesta, part of the Avesta being ascribed to Zoroaster. The religion is a dualism, teaching that Ormazd, the lord of light and goodness, carries on a ceaseless war against Ahriman and the hosts of evil spirits who dwell in darkness. Ormazd created man to aid him, and eventually the good kingdom will be attained. See AVESTA, ORMAZD; cf. MAGI, GHEBER, PARSI, 1.

zos'ter (zŏs'tẽr), n. [L., in sense 2, fr. Gr. ζωστήρ girdle, herpes zoster. See ZONE.] 1. Gr. Costume. A girdle.

2. Med. Herpes zoster; zona; shingles. See HERPES.

Zos-te'ra (zŏs-tē'rä), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ζωστήρ a girdle, a kind of seaweed.] Bot. A small genus of widely distributed marine potamogetonaceous plants with branching stems, distichous leaves, and monœcious flowers borne in a spadix. Z. marina is the eelgrass, or grass wrack.

Zou-ave' (zōō-ăv'; 277), n. [F., fr. Zouaoua, name of a tribe of Kabyles living among the Jurjura mountains in Algeria.] Mil. a One of a body of infantry in the French service, originally Algerians, but now chiefly Frenchmen. They wear a peculiar and brilliant uniform of gaiters, baggy trousers, short and open-fronted jacket, and, usually, a tasseled cap or turban. Their drill is very quick and spirited and the corps has been noted for dash and valor. b Hence, one of a body of soldiers adopting the dress and drill of the Zouaves, as was done by a number of volunteer regiments in the army of the United States in the Civil War, 1861–65.

zu'ĭo-lo (zōō'fō-lō; tsō̆ō'-; 277), n. [It.] A little flute or flageolet, esp. one used to teach birds.

Zu'lu (zōō'lōō), n. One of a great Bantu tribe or nation of Natal, in type and culture identical with the Kafirs. Under the kingship of Chaka (killed in 1828) they devastated large areas, and under his successor, Dingan, came into conflict with the Boers and under later kings with the British. They were noted for marvelous discipline and efficiency of military organization. They now comprise village communities under British supervision and many are Christianized. See KAFIR, n., 3, BANTU.

Zu'lu, a. Of or pertaining to the Zulus.

Zulu cherry, an African sterculiaceous tree (Assonia burgessiæ), or its edible fruit. — z. cloth, a closely woven twill-made cloth designed for crewelwork, outline work, etc.

zu-mat'ic (zū-măt'ĭk), a. [Cf. F. zumatique.] Paint. Designating a drier consisting of compounds of zinc and manganese ground in linseed oil.

zum-boo'ruk (zŭm-bōō'rŭk), n. [Ar., Turk., or Per. zanbūrak, fr. Ar. zanbūr a hornet.] Mil. A small cannon mounted on a swivel, esp. one supported by, and fired from, a rest on the back of a camel, used in the East.

Zu'ñi (zōō'nyē; sōō'-), n. An Indian of the Zuñi pueblo, New Mexico. The Zuñis are peaceable, industrious, and skilled in agriculture, pottery, and weaving. In culture and physique they resemble other Pueblo Indians, but their language is distinct from any known stock. See PUEBLO, 2.

Zu'ñi-an (zōō'nyĭ-ăn), a. Of or pert. to the Zuñis, or designating their linguistic stock. — n. A Zuñi.

‖ Zwie'back' (tsvē'bäk'), n. [G., fr. zwie- two, twice (see TWICE) + backen to bake.] (often l. c.) A kind of biscuit or rusk first baked in a loaf and afterwards cut and toasted; — called also Brussels biscuit or rusk.

Zwing'li-an (tsvĭng'lĭ-ăn; zwĭŋ'glĭ-ăn; 277), a. Theol. Of or pert. to Ulrich Zwingli (1484–1531), reformer, of German Switzerland, who maintained that in the Lord's Supper the true body of Christ is present by the contemplation of faith, but not in essence or reality, and that the sacrament is a memorial without mystical elements. — n. A follower of Zwingli.— Zwing'li-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n.

Zyg'a-de'nus (zĭg'ă-dē'nŭs; zī'gă-), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ζυγός yoke + ἀδήν gland.] Bot. A genus of melanthaceous herbs having basal linear leaves and a terminal panicle of whitish or greenish flowers with a flat spreading perianth, its segments bearing one or two basal glands. They are natives of western North America and Asia. The root of Z. venenosus is poisonous to stock in the western United States.

zyg'a-poph'y-sis (-pŏf'ĭ-sĭs), n.; pl. -SES (-sēz). [NL.; Gr. ζυγόν yoke + apophysis.] Anat. & Zoöl. One of the articular processes of the neural arch of a vertebra, of which there are usually four, two anterior and two posterior. See VERTEBRA, 1. — zyg-ap'o-phys'i-al (zĭg-ăp'ō-fĭz'ĭ-ăl), a.

Zyg-ne'ma (zĭg-nē'mä), n. [NL.; Gr. ζυγόν yoke + νῆμα thread.] Bot. A genus of algæ typifying the family Zygnemaceæ, having two starlike chromatophores in each cell.

Zyg'ne-ma'ce-æ (zĭg'nē-mā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of common fresh-water algæ of the order Desmidiales, forming bright green, slimy masses in stagnant and running water. They consist of simple cylindrical filaments with the chromatophores in spiral bands or stars or rarely straight bands. The best-known genera are Zygnema and Spirogyra. — zyg'ne-ma'ceous (-shŭs), a.

zy'go- (zī'gō-; zĭg'ō-; see note below). Combining form from Greek ζυγόν, yoke, pair.

☞ The pronunciation zĭg'ō-, following the etymology, (the y (υ) being short in Greek), formerly preferred, is yielding to zī'gō-. Cf. DYNA-, HYPO-, PYRO-.

zy'go-dac'tyl, zy'go-dac'tyle (-dăk'tĭl), a. [zygo- + Gr. δάκτυλος finger, toe.] Yoke-footed; having the toes arranged in pairs, two in front and two behind. — n. A yoke-footed bird, as a woodpecker or parrot.

Zy'go-dac'ty-læ (-tĭ-lē), Zy'go-dac'ty-li (-lī), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. In old classifications, a group of nonpasserine birds consisting of those having zygodactyl feet, now regarded as an unnatural group.

zy'go-dont (zī'gō-dŏnt; zĭg'ō-), a. [zygo- + -odont.] Zoöl. Having quadritubercular molar teeth in which the tubercles are united in pairs by crests.

zy-gog'ma (zī-gŏg'mä), n.; pl. -GOMATA (-mă-tă). [NL., fr. Gr. ζύγωμα, fr. ζυγοῦν to yoke, ζυγόν yoke.] Anat. & Zoöl. a The whole zygomatic arch. b The zygomatic process of the temporal bone. c The jugal, malar, or cheek bone. R.

zy'go-mat'ic (zī'gō-măt'ĭk; zĭg'ō-; 277: cf. ZYGO-), a. Anat. & Zoöl. Of, pert. to, or in the region of, the zygoma. zygomatic arch, the arch of bone which extends along the front or side of the skull beneath the orbit, formed in most mammals by the union of the malar, or jugal, with the superior maxillary bone in front and the zygomatic process of the temporal bone behind. In the lower vertebrates other bones may help to form it, and there may be two arches on each side of the skull, as in some reptiles. — z. bone, the jugal bone. — z. fossa, the fossa lying below the zygomatic arch. — z. process, a process of the temporal or squamosal bone helping to form the zygomatic arch.

zy'go-mat'i-co- (-măt'ĭ-kō-). Combining form indicating connection with, or relation to, the zygoma or zygomatic arch.

zy'go-mor'phic (-môr'fĭk) } a. [zygo- + -morphic, -mor- zy'go-mor'phous (-môr'fŭs) } phous.] Bot. & Zoöl. Symmetrical bilaterally; — said of organisms, organs, or parts, capable of division into two symmetrical halves only by a single longitudinal plane passing through the axis; — called also monosymmetrical. Cf. ACTINOMORPHIC.

zy'go-my-cete' (-mī-sēt'), n.; pl. -MYCETES (-mī-sē'tēz). A plant of the subclass Zygomycetes.

Zy'go-my-ce'tes (-mī-sē'tēz), n. pl. [NL.; zygo- + -mycetes.] Bot. One of the three subclasses into which the Phycomycetes, or algal fungi, are divided, including those in which reproduction is by conjugation resulting in production of zygospores. It embraces the orders Mucorales and Entomophthorales. — zy'go-my-ce'tous (-tŭs), a.

Zy'go-phy'ce-æ (-fī'sē-ē; -fĭs'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL.; zygo- + Gr. φῦκος seaweed.] Bot. A class of chiefly unicellular fresh-water algæ having conspicuous chromatophores, and multiplying by simple division and by conjugation. It includes the Bacillariales (diatoms) and Desmidiales (desmids). — zy'go-phy'ceous (-fĭsh'ŭs), a.

Zy'go-phyl-la'ce-æ (-fĭ-lă'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of herbs or shrubs (order Geraniales), the bean-caper family, distinguished by pinnate or bifoliolate stipulate leaves and axillary pentamerous flowers. There are about 18 genera and over 100 species. See ZYGOPHYLLUM, GUAIACUM, 1; and TRIBULUS. — zy'go-phyl-la'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Zy'go-phyl'lum (zī'gō-fĭl'ŭm; zĭg'ō-), n. [NL. ; zygo- + Gr. φύλλον leaf; — in allusion to the opposite leaflets.] Bot. A large genus of shrubs, the bean capers, typifying the Zygophyllaceæ, disting. mainly by the opposite bifoliolate leaves. The species are natives of the Old World.

zy'go-phyte (zī'gō-fīt; zĭg'ō- ; cf. ZYGO-), n. [zygo- + -phyte.] Bot. A plant in which reproduction consists in the union of two similar cells. Cf. OÖPHYTE.

zy'go-spore (-spōr; 201), n. [zygo- + spore.] Bot. A spore formed by conjugation of two similar gametes or sexual cells;— opposed to oöspore. Zygospores are commonly produced among the conjugate algæ (class Zygophyceæ) and the parallel group of fungi (Zygomycetes), and commonly serve as resting spores. — zy'go-spor'ic (-spŏr'ĭk), a.

zy'gote (zī'gōt ; zĭg'ōt ; 277 : cf. ZYGO-), n. [Gr. ζυγωτός yoked. See ZYGOMA.] Bot. Any spore formed by the conjugation of two gametes; loosely, a zygospore.

zy'mase (zī'māz), n. [From ZYME.] Chem. a An enzyme in yeast cells, from which it may be obtained as an extract. It brings about the decomposition of sugar into alcohol and carbon dioxide. b = ENZYME, 1. c Invertase. Obs.

zyme (zīm), n. [Gr. ζύμη leaven.] A ferment ; specif., Med., the morbific principle of a zymotic disease.

zym'ic (zĭm'ĭk ; zīm'ĭk), a. Old Chem. a Pert. to, or due to, fermentation. b Formerly, designating lactic acid.

zy'mo- (zī'mō-), zym-. [See ZYME.] A combining form used in physiology, biology, etc., to indicate connection with, or relation to, a ferment, or zyme, or fermentation.

zy'mo-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. 1. Producing fermentation ; as, zymogenic bacteria.

2. Of or pertaining to a zymogen.

zymogenic organism, Biol., a microörganism, as the yeast plant or some bacteria, which sets up fermentative processes giving definite chemical products ; — disting. from a pathogenic organism. Cf. MICROCOCCUS.

zy-mol'o-gy (zī-mŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [zymo- + -logy.] A treatise on the fermentation of liquors, or the doctrine of fermentation. — zy'mo-log'ic (zī'mō-lŏj'ĭk), zy'mo-log'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. — zy-mol'o-gist (zī-mŏl'ō-jĭst), n.

zy-mol'y-sis (zī-mŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL. ; zymo- + -lysis.] Chem. Action of enzymes ; also, the changes produced by such action ; enzymosis. — zy'mo-lyt'ic (zī'mō-lĭt'ĭk), a.

zy-mom'e-ter (zī-mŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [zymo- + -meter.] An instrument for measuring fermentation. Cf. ZYMOSCOPE.

zy'mo-plas'tic (zī'mō-plăs'tĭk), a. [zymo- + -plastic.] Physiol. Chem. Pert. to or designating certain substances which, not themselves enzymes or zymogens, are believed to participate in the formation of enzymes.

zy'mo-scope (zī'mō-skōp), n. [zymo- + -scope.] Physiol. Chem. An apparatus for determining the fermenting power of yeast by measuring the amount of carbonic acid evolved from a given quantity of sugar.

zy-mo'sis (zī-mō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ζύμωσις fermentation, fr. ζύμη ferment.] a Fermentation ; hence, Med., an analogous process by which an infectious disease is believed to be developed. b A zymotic disease. Rare.

zy'mo-tech'nics (zī'mō-tĕk'nĭks), n. [zymo- + technics.] Act of inducing and applying fermentation for technical uses. — zy'mo-tech'nic (-nĭk), -tech'ni-cal (-nĭ-kăl), a.

zy-mot'ic (zī-mŏt'ĭk), a. [Gr. ζυμωτικός causing to ferment, fr. ζυμοῦν to ferment, ζύμη ferment, leaven.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or caused by, fermentation.

2. Med. Designating, or pertaining to, any infectious or contagious disease.

zy'mur-gy (zī'mûr-jĭ), n. [zymo- + Gr. ἔργον work.] That branch of applied chemistry which has to do with fermentation processes, as in wine making, brewing, etc.

zy'thum (zī'thŭm), n. [L., fr. Gr. ζῦθος kind of beer.] A kind of ancient malt beverage.

zo-ril'la (zō-rĭl'ä), n. [Sp. zorrilla, zorrillo. See ZORIL.] a The zoril. b [cap.] The genus including the zorils, recently supplanted by Ictonyx. [ZOÖL.]

zor'ille (zŏr'ĭl; zō-rĭl'). Var. of ZORILLA.

Zor'ĭl-la'ne (zŏr'ĭ-lĭ'nē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. In some classifications, a subfamily of Mustelidæ including the zoril.

Zo'rites (zō'rītz ; 201). Bib. zo'ro-a-a'stri-a-nism (zō'rō-ā-ăs'trĭ-ă'nĭz'm), n. Zoroastrianism.

Zo-rob'a-bel (zō-rŏb'ä-bĕl; -rō'bä-bĕl). Var. of ZERUBBABEL.

zor'ro (sŏr'rō), 194, 283), n. [Sp.] A fox ; esp., a gray fox of the genus Urocyon. Sp. Amer.

zor-zi'co (zōr-zē'kō), n. [Basque zortziko.] A form of song in quintuple or sextuple time, common among the Basques.

Zos'ma (zŏs'mä), n. = DUHR. See STAR.

zoutch (zouch), n. t. [Cf. SOUCHET, SOUCHIE.] To stew, as flounders, eels, etc., with just enough liquid to cover them. Dial. Eng.

zowns. ✝ ZOUNDS, interj.

Zr. Abbr. Chem. [without period, Zr]. Zirconium.

z rail. See Z, a.

Z. S. Abbr. Zoölogical Society.

Zu (zōō), n. [Assyrian zû, lit., storm.] Babylon. Myth. A storm god, represented as a bird, who snatches the tablets of fate from Ea-lil, or Bel, and in turn loses them to another god, Marduk (perhaps, orig., Shamash), who thus becomes supreme.

Zu'ar (zū'är). Bib.

Zu-ben'el Ge-nu'bi (zōō-bĕn' ĕl jē-nōō'bī). [Ar. zubān al janūbah southern claw.] See STAR.

Zu-ben'es-cha-ma'li. (-ĕs-ĕ-hä-mä'lē), n. [Ar. zubān al shamālīah northern claw.] See STAR.

Zub'tee. Var. of ZABTI.

zuc'ca-ri'no, n. [It. zuccarina (Florio), or It. allume zucherino.] A kind of bright Roman alum. Obs.

zuc-chet'to (tsōōk-kĕt'tō), n. [It.] = CALOTTE, 1 b.

Zu'ker-tort' (tsōōk'ẽr-tôrt'), n. See list CHESS, 1.

zulde. ✝ SHOULD.

zu'le (zōō'lē), n. Her. A chess.

Zu-lei'ka (zōō-lā'kä; -lĭ'-), n. The dutiful heroine of Byron's poem "The Bride of Abydos." She dies of a broken heart after her lover has been shot by her father. The name is a common one for a lady in Persian poetry.

Zu'l-hij'jah (zōōl-h ĭj'ä), n. [Ar. dhū l hijjah, lit., possessor of cordial distilled from the juice of damson plums.

zy. ✝ SHE.

zy'ga, n. ; L. pl. of ZYGON.

Zy-gæ'ni-dæ (zī-jē'nĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ζύγαινα (perh.) the hammer-headed shark.] Zoöl. a Syn. of SPHYRNIDÆ. b A family of moths, properly called Pyromorphidæ, including the foresters, burnet moths, and allied forms. Most of them are bright-colored. — zy-gæ'nid (-nĭd), a. & n.

zy'gal (zī'găl), a. Pert. to a zygon ; shaped like H.

zy-gan'trum (zī-găn'trŭm), n. ; pl. -TRA (-trä). [Gr. ζυγόν a yoke + ἄντρον a cave, hôle.] Zoöl. See ZYGOSPHENE.

zy-ge'nid (zĭ-jē'nĭd), n. [See ZYGÆNIDÆ.] = ZYGÆNID.

zygge. ✝ SAY.

zy'gi-a (zī'jĭ-ä), n. [NL., fr. Gr ζυγία, a tree, prob. the hornbeam.] Bot. A small genus of mimosaceous trees or shrubs related to Pithecolobium. It is represented in Florida by the cat's-claw (Z. unguis-cati).

zyg'i-on (zĭg'ĭ-ŏn ; zĭj'-), n. [Gr. ζυγόν yoke + -ion, Török's common ending for craniometric points.] Craniom. The point at the end of the bizygomatic diameter.

zy'gite (zī'gīt), n. [Gr. ζυγίτης.] See GALLEY, 2.

Zy'go-bran'chi-a (zī'gō-brăŋ'kĭ-ä; zĭg'ō-), Zy'go-bran'chi-a'ta (-brăŋ'kĭ-ā'tä), n. pl. [NL. ; zygo- + -branchia.] Zoöl. A division of marine prosobranchiate gastropoda in which the gills are placed symmetrically on the sides of the neck and the renal organs are also paired. It comprises the Fissurellidæ, Haliotidæ, and Pleurotomaridæ. — zy'go-bran'chi-ate (-brăŋ'kĭ-āt), a. & n.

zy'go-dac-tyl'ic (-dăk-tĭl'ĭk), zy'go-dac'ty-lous (-dăk'tĭ-lŭs), a. Zygodactyl.

zy'gon (zī'gŏn ; zĭg'ŏn), n. ; L. pl. -GA (-gă; -ä). [NL., fr. Gr. ζυγόν yoke, crossbar.] Anat. An H-shaped fissure of the brain, or, more strictly, the fissure representing the crossbar of the H.

zy'gose (zī'gōs ; zĭg'ōs ; cf. -OSE), a. Bot. Pert. to zygosis.

zy-go'sis (zĭ-gō'sĭs ; zī-), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ζυγοῦσις a balancing, fr. ζυγοῦν to yoke.] Bot. & Zoöl. = CONJUGATION, 6.

zy'go-sperm, n. [zygo- + sperm.] Bot. A zygospore.

zy'go-sphene (zī'gō-sfēn ; zĭg'ō-), n. [zygo- + Gr. σφήν a wedge.] Zoöl. A median process on the front part of the neural arch of the vertebræ of most snakes and some lizards, which fits into a fossa, the zy-gan'trum (zī-găn'trŭm), on the back of the arch in front. — zy'go-sphe'nal (zī'gō-sfē'năl ; zĭg'ō-), a.

zy'go-spo-ran'gi-um (-spō-răn'jĭ-ŭm), or zy'go-spo-range' (zī'gō-spō-rānj' ; zĭg'ō-), n. ; pl. -GIA (-ä) ; -GES (-jēz). [NL. zygosporangium.] Bot. A sporangium in which zygospores are produced.

zy'go-spo'ro-phore (-spŏ'rō-fōr; 201), n. A zygophore.

zy'go-tax'is (-tăk'sĭs), n. [NL. ; zygo- + -taxis.] Plant Physiol. The attraction between two zygophores causing conjugation. — zy'go-tac'tic (-tăk'tĭk), a.

zy'go-to-blast' (zī'gō-tō-blăst', zĭg'ō-), n. [zygote + -blast.] Zoöl. A sporozoite produced by segmentation of the zygotomere of the malaria parasite or allied sporozoan. Ross.

zy'go-to-mere' (-mēr'), n. [zygote + -mere.] Zoöl. A spore or cell formed by segmentation of the zygote of the malaria parasite or allied sporozoan.

zy'go-zo'ŏ-spore (zī'gō-z ō'ō-spōr ; zĭg'ō-), n. [zygo- + zoöspore.] Bot. A motile zygospore.

zy'lon-ite (zī'lŏn-īt), n. [See XYLONITE.] Celluloid.

zym-. See ZYMO-.

zy'mo-gen'e-sis (zī'mō-jĕn'ē-sĭs), n. [See ZYMO-; -GENESIS.] Physiol. Chem. Transformation of a zymogen into an enzyme.

zy-mog'e-nous (zī-mŏj'ē-nŭs), a. = ZYMOGENIC, 1.

zy'mome (zī'mōm), n. [Gr. ζύμωμα a fermented mixture.] Old Chem. Gluten.

zy'mo-phore (zī'mō-fōr ; 201), n. [zymo- + Gr. φορός bearing.] Bot. = ZYMO- + -PHORE.] Toxophoric. See SIDE-CHAIN THEORY.

zy'mo-sim'e-ter (-sĭm'ē-tẽr), n. [Gr. ζύμωσις fermentation + -meter.] = ZYMOMETER.

zy'mo-tox'ic, a. [See ZYMO-; TOXIC.] See SIDE-CHAIN THEORY.

Zyr'i-an (zĭr'ĭ-ăn), n. A tribe, speaking a Finno-Ugric tongue, dwelling about the headwaters of the Pechora and Dvina Rivers, Russia. They are mainly hunters and are practically Russianized. Also, their language.

zy'them (zī'thĕm). Var. of ZYTHUM.

zy-thep'sa-ry (zī-thĕp'sä-rĭ), n. [Gr. ζῦθος a kind of beer + ἑψειν to boil.] A brewery. Obs.

INTRODUCTION.

In the two following vocabularies the most difficult questions to determine have been those relating to spelling and pronunciation; and, as in both vocabularies the same principles are involved, it has seemed best to mention them here in one general statement.

Until within a few years the spelling of proper names, particularly those in geography, was very unsystematic. Each writer apparently chose the form that seemed to him good, irrespective of what others had done before him or of any consistency even in his own work. Added to this was the confusion resulting from the fact that much geographical information originally came into English from foreign sources through the explorations of German, French, or other foreign travelers. The spelling of native names by these authors was frequently adopted by English translators and geographical writers without realization of the fact that the letters of a German spelling, for instance, would, when spoken with their usual English values, give a very different pronunciation from that originally intended, and would very inadequately represent the native name to the English reader. Then, too, while one English writer would take his spelling from a German authority, another in describing the same place would adopt a French spelling, while a third would apparently make a combination of the two. To overcome these serious difficulties the Royal Geographical Society of England some years ago formulated a set of rules to govern geographic spellings. Similar rules were adopted a little later by the United States Geographic Board and still more recently by the Geographic Board of Canada. The rules of these various geographical bodies have formed the basis for the spellings in this Gazetteer.

Names pertaining to India follow the spelling of Hunter's "Gazetteer of India," the authority accepted by the Royal Geographical Society.

For names in the United States and Canada the specific decisions of the respective geographic boards have been followed. There are, however, hundreds of questionable cases on which no definite decision has as yet been given, and in order that such cases might be settled in accordance with the policy of the United States Geographic Board they have been referred for decision to Mr. Henry Gannett, Geographer of the United States Geological Survey, and Chairman of the United States Geographic Board. He has also given his aid in determining the spelling of a large number of Oriental names.

In European names the best local spelling as shown by official census returns and government maps has been sought, due attention being paid to those cases in which a more or less Anglicized form has become fixed in English usage. Since in French, German, Scandinavian, Spanish, Portuguese, Hungarian, Roumanian, and the Slavic languages using the Roman alphabet, certain diacritical marks and accents form an integral part of the spelling, such marks have been given in this Gazetteer.

In countries where there has been a frequent change in the ruling race or where, as in Poland, a strong national feeling has kept alive the national language under an alien rule, two or more names or forms of the same name are frequently in current use. In such cases the aim has been to give usually the local name first, with such alternative forms as seemed desirable, inserting cross references from the more important alternatives to the full entry. Thus most Polish names are given under the Polish forms, though names of the Russian administrative divisions in Poland are given under their Russian forms, the Polish equivalents being placed second. Many names, however, have been introduced into English and become settled by usage in other forms than those of the local language. Thus many Hungarian and Bohemian towns are usually known in English by their German names. In such cases the best known name rather than the local one has been given the place of preference.

In the work on the Biographical Dictionary there has been a careful comparison of many authorities. Where authorities differ particular care has been taken to learn the facts or most recent opinions. For British names the "Dictionary of National Biography" has usually been followed.

For names in countries using the Greek alphabet or its modified form, the Cyrillic, as in Russia, Servia, Bulgaria, and some other Slavic countries, a system of transliteration has been used by which each letter of the Greek or Cyrillic alphabet is always replaced by the same letter of the Roman alphabet. This is a method which has for some time been followed by German geographers, and is in use by some of the leading geographical publications of Great Britain. The spelling of Russian names in English has been inconsistent to the last degree, and it is hoped that the effort which has been made to spell systematically such of these names as occur in this Gazetteer and Biographical Dictionary may aid in establishing a more uniform English usage.

In pronunciation the aim has been to give as nearly as possible the best local usage of each country, except in the case of certain well-known names like Paris, Naples, Milan, etc., that have an accepted English pronunciation and have often acquired an English form of spelling. For such names the English pronunciation is given, but the foreign spelling and pronunciation have usually been added.

The ascertaining of pronunciations has been a difficult task. Information has been sought not only in authoritative books, both English and foreign, but also by direct inquiries from educated natives and by correspondence with persons in the particular locality the pronunciation of whose name was desired. It is hoped that the result will be found equal to the effort expended. It is realized, however, that many times only an approximate result has been attained, since it is necessary to describe the phonetic symbols used by referring them to English sounds, and often the foreign sounds are about midway between the sounds most nearly equivalent to them in English. In such cases it is often a question of nice judgment to determine the proper symbol to be used, and what seems right to one ear will seem an error to another.

The difficult work of transliterating from the Russian was intrusted to Mr. Leo Wiener, Professor of the Slavic languages at Harvard University. He is also responsible for the spelling and pronunciation of all the Slavic names in both the Biographical and Geographical vocabularies, and has given much assistance in determining the spelling and pronunciation of many of the names pertaining to Turkey, Greece, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and the Netherlands.

The work in pronunciation, with the exceptions noted above, has been done by Mr. Paul W. Carhart. The work of verification and definition of entries for the Gazetteer has been done by Frederick W. Kilbourne, Ph. D. The chief work of revising and enlarging the Biographical Dictionary has been done by Mr. E. L. Engle. Indebtedness to Prof. E. S. Sheldon of Harvard University should be acknowledged for advice about many intricate points of pronunciation and spelling; to Dr. K. Asakawa of Yale University for much assistance in determining the spelling and pronunciation of Japanese names; to Mr. Henry Rayment of London, England, for information about many English names; to Mr. Edward Tregear of Wellington, N. Z., Mr. J. P. Thomson of the Australasian Geographical Society, A. Meston, Esq., of Brisbane, Queensland, Mr. J. Lake of Melbourne, Victoria, and Mr. Fred J. Broomfield, and others whose work on the publishers' Australasian Gazetteer has been to a certain extent incorporated in this vocabulary; and to the many correspondents in the United States and in foreign countries who have answered queries about individual places and persons.

ELEMENTS OF PRONUNCIATION OF FOREIGN NAMES.

NOTE. In the following remarks it has been possible to describe only the more important sounds of the chief foreign languages. The descriptions of sounds that have no exact English equivalents are necessarily only approximate. In addition to giving information especially adapted to the names recorded in these dictionaries these rules are useful as an aid to the pronunciation of other names not included.

I. GENERAL OBSERVATIONS — ACCENTS, ETC.

§ 1. The number of syllables in a foreign name is usually to be determined by the number of vowels or diphthongs which it contains, except that doubled vowels generally belong to the same syllable.

In the following vocabularies, the number of syllables in a name is usually to be determined from the number of accents or hyphens, or of both together, in the respelling; thus the Russian name Dniester is pronounced, not dnĭ-ĕs'tẽr, in three syllables, but dnyĕs'tẽr, in two, the ny being employed to indicate a sound like that of ni in minion.

§ 2. Every letter, or combination of letters, occurring in the respelling for pronunciation of a word or name, is to be pronounced with its proper English sound as shown in the key line at the foot of the pages; e. g., ch is to be sounded as in chair, g as in get, etc. Thus, the pronunciation of Chihuahua is given as chē-wä'wä: many, however, have called it shē-wä'wä, not considering that if such had been the true sound it would have been so respelt.

§ 3. Accent (stress). Something analogous to English accent (Guide to Pron., §§ 78–80) is found in nearly all languages. In the Teutonic tongues, especially, the accent is essentially the same as in English, a large number of the polysyllabic words having both the primary and secondary accent, as Son'ders-hau'sen, Hoh'en-zol'lern. It may be observed, however, that in none of the other languages, not even in the Teutonic, is the stress of voice thrown so strongly on a single syllable as it usually is in English; consequently, the unaccented syllables are almost invariably pronounced more distinctly than by us This is an important point to be borne in mind by those who wish to speak foreign words or names correctly. One should be careful to pronounce each vowel, whether in an accented or an unaccented syllable, distinctly, if it is not expressly marked as obscure

Among what may be termed the principal European languages (as English, French, German, Italian, Russian, and Spanish) there is scarcely one general rule for accent to which there are not many exceptions, and this is especially true of proper names. The rules of most general application are perhaps the following: —

In Danish, Dutch, German, and Swedish, the main accent is most often on the first syllable, as in English.

In French the marks called accents that are placed over the different vowels serve only to indicate some particular sound of these letters, and not stress of the voice. (Cf. ê, é, ô, etc., under VOWELS.) It is commonly said that the French pronounce all the syllables of a word with an equal stress of voice, but that they seem to an English ear to accentuate the last, because in our language the universal tendency is to throw the accent toward the beginning of the word. As a matter of fact, the stress, which is weak in French, always falls chiefly on the last syllable of an isolated word, as ordinarily pronounced, except when that syllable contains no sounded vowel; thus, Molière, mô′lyâr′, Chambertin, shäⁿ′bĕr′tăⁿ′, but Castres, käs′tr′. When, however, words are combined in speech the stress often shifts somewhat. In these lists, the principal accent has been placed on the last syllable of French names; at the same time it has been thought proper to mark the others with secondary accents, in order to prevent them from being pronounced too slightly or indistinctly, as is usually the case with unaccented syllables in English. The pronunciation of Orléans, for example, has been thus given, ôr′lā′ăⁿ′.

In Spanish and Portuguese, names ending in a vowel most often have the accent on the penult; in Spanish those ending in a consonant except n or s are generally accented on the last syllable; yet to these rules there are numerous exceptions; e. g., Alcalá, Alcántara, Almodóvar, etc. The accent in both these languages is very weak.

In Italian and Polish the accent is usually on the penult.

In Icelandic, Hungarian, and Bohemian the accent is always on the first syllable, no matter how long the word, but it is not so strong as to interfere with the lengths of following syllables, which are pronounced distinctly.

In Turkish the accent is similar to the French accent, being very light and usually on the last syllable.

In Hindustani, Urdu, and many other East Indian names, the accent is on the last syllable if it ends in two consonants, or in a single consonant following a long vowel; otherwise it is on the penult, if that contains a long vowel; or it is on the antepenult.

In Japanese there is almost no accent. The stress is usually evenly distributed or falls slightly on the first syllable; as, Satsuma, sät′sōō-mä.

A written acute accent indicates a long vowel in Hungarian and Bohemian In Spanish it shows where the stress falls. In French it shows a particular quality of the vowel over which it is placed, as do also the other written accents. In Italian it shows both vowel quality and stress, as does also the grave, and also, often, the circumflex.

§ 4. Doubled letters. A doubled vowel, in foreign words, is generally to be sounded more distinctly and fully than a single vowel of the same kind. This applies to nearly all the doubled vowels in foreign languages; ee and oo in Dutch and German, ii and uu in Danish and Norwegian, being simply equivalent to the single vowel prolonged. Doubled consonants are pronounced long or doubled (as tt in coat tail) in Italian, Swedish, Hungarian, Arabic, and Japanese; otherwise they are usually pronounced as a single consonant, as in English (e. g., fatty, pron. făt′ĭ, etc.). A doubled r in Spanish, Italian, etc., is pronounced as a long and strong trill. It is indicated by doubling the r in the respelling.

§ 5. Final consonants. In the Slavic languages (Polish, Russian, etc.) and in German and Dutch, b, d, g, v, z, when occurring at the end of a word are never pronounced with their voiced sounds as in English, but are pronounced like p, t, k (or κ), f, s (or sh). But cf. G under CONSONANTS. — Final consonants in French, except c, f, l, r (cf. er, § 8), are usually silent, but to this rule there are many exceptions, especially in proper names

☞ For the pronunciation of names from the Latin, classic Greek, and Hebrew, see Guide to Pron., §§ 271-5.

II. VOWELS, DIPHTHONGS, and VOWEL COMBINATIONS.

§ 6. In general, the values of the vowels in the chief languages other than English are as follows: a, when long, is like a in art; when short it is like a in artistic or like a in ask. e, when long and close, is like a in ale; when long and open it is like a in care; when short and close it is like a in ale pronounced quickly; when short and open it is like e in met. i, when long, is like e in me; when short it is like e in event or like i in pin. o, when long and close, is like o in old; when long and open it is like o in or; when short it is like o in obey, or between this and o in odd. u, when long, is like oo in pool; when short it is like oo in pool pronounced quickly, or like oo in book. — It should be carefully observed, however, that the English a as in ale and o as in old are diphthongal, more markedly so in British than in American English, the a as in ale ending in a vanishing sound like ĕ in ĕ-vent′ or i in pin, the o in old ending in a vanishing sound like oo in book. In the foreign sounds, as in Spanish, Italian, French, or German, these vanishing sounds are entirely absent. The vowels a, o, e are often called strong; i, u, weak.

A.

§ 7. A, in most languages other than English, never has a sound like that in the English words fate or name, but is usually like the a in far or in artistic, as in Italian, German, and Spanish; or it is like the a in fast, often approximating that in fat, as commonly in French. — In Hungarian a is about like o in hot; á is like a in father. — Short a in Sanskrit and many East Indian names is like u in but or a in sofa.

ä (or ae) in German when long is like a in care, or in many parts of Germany like a in fate; when short it is like e in met. — In Swedish ä is like e in there (or often a in at) or in met,

ă in Roumanian is somewhat like e in her or u in fur.

ą in Polish is like o in nor (generally nasal. See § 17).

å in Swedish, in the best usage, sounds like English o in so, but it is pronounced by many Swedes like a in fall, which is the older sound. When short it is like o in not.

ã in Portuguese (see III.).

aa in Danish and Norwegian usually sounds nearly like English a in fall, sometimes approaching o long. — In German and Dutch, aa is like a in art.

ae (or ä) in German is like a in care, when long, or by many like a in fate (cf. ä); when short it is like e in net. — In Dutch and Flemish ae is like a in far. (In the modern Dutch orthography, ae is replaced by aa. Thus, the name formerly written Haerlem is now Haarlem, etc.) — In Danish and Norwegian ae often is like a in fat; in Welsh it approaches the sound of i in ice.

ãe in Portuguese (see III.).

ah in German is like a in art.

äh in German is the same as German long ä.

ai is usually a diphthong, compounded of the sound of a as in far and i as in fig, or ĕ as in ĕ-vent′, thus nearly corresponding in sound to English long i in side (by which it is often represented). — In French it is pronounced nearly like ai in the English word rail or like a in fate.

ai (αι) in modern Greek when long is like a in name; when short like e in met.

ail and aill in French (see il, ill).

aim, ain in French (see III.).

aj in Danish approaches i in side; in Hungarian it is like oi in boil; as, Tokaj (tō′koi).

áj in Hungarian is ä′ĕ (almost like i in side).

am, an in French and Portuguese (see III.).

ão in Portuguese (see III.).

au has generally the sound of ou in house or ow in now. — In French, au has the sound of long o in hope (cf. eau). — au (αυ) in modern Greek sounds like ave in have (but with the a as in ask) before vowels and voiced (sonant) consonants, and like aff in chaff before voiceless (surd) consonants.

äu in German is like oi in oil. It has the same sound as German eu.

auw in Dutch is like ou in house.

av in Danish before a consonant is usually like ou in house.

aw in Welsh is like ou in house.

ay (see y) is generally like ai above; in French it sounds like a in ale, but if a sounded vowel immediately follows, it is the same sound (sometimes a in fast), followed by y as in English yet.

E.

§ 8. E generally has a sound similar to a in fate, or else to e in there or, when short, to e in met. Cf. § 6. — In French, e without written accent is regularly silent when final, and it is occasionally so in Danish and German. It is usually also silent in French, or very short and obscure, like e in battery, when it ends a syllable other than the last. — In German, e, unlike the other vowels, is more or less obscured in unaccented syllables, especially in the unaccented prefixes be- and ge-, and in final unaccented syllables. — In Russian, e after the dentals (d, t, l, n), and in the beginning of syllables, has the value of ye in yet; after the labials (p, b, m) and others it approaches a in fate, though sometimes it is ye as in yet. Accented e in Russian is often like yo in York, but after a sibilant it is like o in for; as, Vyshni Volochek (-chôk′). — Final unaccented e in Portuguese is almost mute. — In modern Greek, e (for ε) is like a in name, or e in met, or (for η) like e in me or like i in pin.

é in French is like a in fate. Cf. § 6. — è and ê in French when long are like a in care; when short, like e in met.

ę in Polish (see III.).

ě in Bohemian is like ye in yet; as, Prostějov, prôs′tyĕ-yôf.

ee, as in German, is generally like a in ale prolonged but not diphthongal. Cf. § 6.

eeu and eeuw in Dutch are like a in ale, followed by the sound of oo in English book or of w in English we, as in Leeuwarden (lā′wär-dĕn); but eeuw followed by an obscure e is like a in ale followed by Dutch w (about English v); as, leeuwen, pronounced lā′vĕn.

eh in German is like a in ale. Cf. § 6.

ei is generally a diphthong, combining the sounds of a in fate (or e in met) and ĕ in ĕvent, being similar to ay in day or a in ale when pronounced very full (cf. E, above). — In French ei is like a in ale, without the final i-sound (cf. § 6). — In German and Welsh ei is like i in side. — In Dutch ei is between i in ride and ei in veil; in South African Dutch it is more distinctly like ei in veil. — In modern Greek ei is like e in me or ĕ in ĕ-vent′.

ein in French (see III.).

ej in Danish is like i in ice; in Hungarian it is similar to ei in veil, or like ĕĭ in one syllable.

em, en in French and Portuguese (see III.).

er in French, when final, is regularly like French é, or a in ale, as in Gautier (gō′tyā′), but in proper names the r is often sounded, as in Gérardmer (pronounced in both ways).

es in French, unless the e is written è or é, is usually silent, as in Charles (shärl).

eu in French and Dutch has a sound nearly like u in the English word fur, or the e in her. If the lips are put in position to pronounce oo and while they are held in that position the speaker tries to pronounce a in ale, a close approximation to the sound may be obtained. This sound is represented by u in fur, in the respelling for pronunciation. — eu in German is like oi in oil. In modern Greek eu, representing ευ, is pronounced ev when a vowel or a voiced (sonant) consonant follows, and ef when a voiceless (surd) consonant follows. — Otherwise eu is a diphthong composed of a in ale or e in met and oo.

ey is usually like ei (cf. y) ez final in French is regularly like French é, but the z is sometimes sounded, either as s or as z, as in Douarnenez (dōō′är′nĕ-nĕs′ or -nĕz′).

I.

§ 9. I usually sounds as in marine, or as e in me. It is often like our short i, as in pin. It is sometimes like e in met, as in the endings -ling and -ding in Danish names. It is important to observe that i final in French, Italian, Spanish, and some other languages, has the clear sound of e in me, but pronounced short; it should, therefore, not be allowed to fall into short i (*ĭ*n), as it usually does in English or in Anglicized words, nor, on the other hand, should it be prolonged.

i, unaccented before a vowel, often sounds like English y (yes), as in Italian, French, and Spanish, so that the combinations ia, ie, io, iu sound as yä, yā (or yâ), yō, yōō, etc. Thus, Piedemonte (pyā′dā-mōn′tā), Armentières (är′măⁿ′tyâr′), Piedad (pyā-thath′). An unaccented i, following c or g and preceding a, o, or u, in Italian is silent, serving only to show that the c or g is soft, as in Bracciolini (brät′chō-lē′nē), Correggio (kôr-rĕd′jō).

î is like i in machine, except in Roumanian, in which it is about like i in pin.

ĭ final in Roumanian is silent, but it palatalizes the preceding consonant; that is, it causes it to be sounded as if followed by the consonant y.

ia. See i, unaccented before a vowel, above.

ie. See i, unaccented before a vowel, above. — At the end of a word in French ie is always pronounced like e in the English word me, but shorter. — In German, ie has most often the sound of e in me, when long; of i in pin, when short. It has also often the sound of ĭ-ĕ, or yĕ, as in Amalie (ä-mä′lĭ-ĕ or -yĕ). — In Dutch ie is like e in me.

ieh in German is like e in me.

ien in French (see III.).

ieuw in Dutch is like English ē + oo pronounced in one wave of sound, or ē followed by w as in we; except when followed by obscure e, when it is like English ē followed by Dutch w (about Eng. v), as in nieuwe (nē′vĕ).

ih in German is like e in me.

ij in Dutch has no equivalent in English; it approaches long i in ride (cf. y), or, as heard by some, ei in veil. It has the same sound as Dutch ei.

il in French when final and ill in the middle of words (not when initial) is like English ē followed by y as in yes. When the il or ill are preceded by a sounded vowel they indicate simply the sound of y in yes. Formerly this ll was pronounced like lli in million, Aurillac being ô′rēl′yák′, and some speakers still retain this pronunciation.

im, in, in French and Portuguese (see III.).

io, iu. See i, unaccented before a vowel, above.

O.

§ 10. O, when long, has, in general, either the sound of English o in old or of o in or; when short, it is like o in obey, or, often, it is a sound intermediate between this and o in odd. Cf. § 6. One should be careful not to pronounce short o in French, German, and Italian names with a sound resembling a as in far, as short o is apt to be in English. — In Russian, o, before the accent, is almost like a in fast. — In Swedish and Norwegian, at the end of a syllable, o is sounded like English oo, and so also in Polish when written ó; as, Lwów, lvôōf. — Unaccented o, in Portuguese, is often like oo in book, pronounced very lightly, as in Oporto (-tōō).

ö (cf. eu) occurs in several European languages. The sound that it represents is unlike any in English, the nearest English sound being e in her, or u in fur, the latter (û) being used in the respelling. If, while the lips are retained in the position for forming o long, the speaker tries to utter the sound of a in ale, the sound of ö long may be produced; the short ö is pronounced by holding the lips in the same position and uttering e in met. This sound, as well as that of the French u (German ü) and French eu, should, if possible, be learned from an instructor.

õ in Portuguese (see III.).

oe in some German and other names is equivalent to ö, and has then the same sound as ö. — oe is pronounced like o in so in Low German names; as, Koesfeld, Itzehoe, etc. — In Dutch oe is like o͞o or o͝o. — In Welsh oe is somewhat like English oi in oil.

õe in Portuguese (see III.).

œu in French is like eu or ö (above).

oh, as in German, is like o in so.

oi in French is usually sounded like wä, or wȧ; moi is pronounced mwȧ, or mwȧ; roi, rwä, or rwȧ, etc. — In modern Greek, oi (οι) is like i in marine. — Elsewhere oi is generally like oi in boil. In a few Low German names, as Voigtland, it is like o in so.

oin in French (see III.).

öj in Danish is somewhat like ö (see ö) followed by consonant y.

oo is like English o in note, or the same prolonged. Cf. § 6. — In Dutch oo is like o in note prolonged, but in South African Dutch it is like oo in pool; thus oom (Du. o͞m; So. Afr. Du. o͞om).

ou in French and in modern Greek (ου) sounds like English oo; in Dutch and Norwegian, like ou in house; in Portuguese it is nearly like o in so.

U.

§ 11. U in most languages is pronounced like the English o͞o or o͝o. In French (and in Dutch when it ends a syllable, cf. uu), u may be said to combine the sounds of English oo and long e. If the speaker, after placing his lips in the position for pronouncing oo, endeavors, without moving his lips, to utter the sound of ee, the sound of French u may be produced. The symbol ü is used in the respelling to represent this sound. — If a consonant follows in the same syllable, Dutch u has a sound nearly like English u in but; it retains this sound even before r. — Swedish u is like English oo, or sometimes somewhat like u in but, or e in her. — In Welsh, u is like English i in marine, or i in pit. — u, final, in Roumanian is usually silent; as, Neamţu (nyämts). — It is often nearly silent in Japanese. — u is otherwise sometimes silent, as in gu, qu (see IV.).

u, unaccented before a vowel, as in Italian and Spanish, is often pronounced like English w, ua, ue, ui, uo sounding as wä, wā (or wȧ), wē, wō (or wȯ), etc., as in Buena (bwā′nä), Fuego (fwā′gō), etc. Cf. i, unaccented before a vowel.

ü in German, Hungarian, and Turkish, is like the French u, and ue is sometimes used to represent this sound, otherwise ue combines the sound of both u and e.

uh in German is like oo in pool. — üh is like ü, long.

ui in French is French u + ĕ pronounced in one wave of sound (but compare gu and qu below); wē is a close approximation to this sound. — In Dutch, ui (uy) approaches English oi in oil, or is like eu in French.

um, un in French and Portuguese (see III.).

uu in Dutch is like French u, pronounced long. — French uy is like French ui, or, if a pronounced vowel follows the y, it is like French ui + y as in yoü.

Y.

§ 12. Y, as a vowel, is usually like i; that is, like English ē, ĕ. — In Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian it is like French u. — In Dutch and Flemish (now usually ij) it is like ī in ride. — In Spanish, y is a vowel only when standing alone, as in y, and; or at the end of a word. It does not occur between consonants in Spanish, being replaced by i. Cf. y, as a consonant, under CONSONANTS.

ym, yn in French (see III.).

III. NASAL VOWELS AND DIPHTHONGS.

§ 13. M and n in French and Portuguese when final, or before any other consonant than another m or n, and following a vowel or a diphthong, show that the preceding vowel or diphthong is pronounced with a nasal tone. In producing these nasal vowels, the breath or voice is allowed to pass out through both the nose and the mouth, so that the vowel sounds remain unchanged, except for the accompanying nasalization. The m or n is not sounded, except as thus giving the nasal tone to the vowel. These sounds thus differ materially from English vowels followed by n or ng, the oral passage in pronouncing n or ng being entirely closed. A small capital N is used in the respelling for pronunciation to indicate that a preceding vowel or diphthong is nasal.

§ 14. The nasal vowels in French are: am, an, em, en (cf. ien), all having regularly the sound of English a in far, made nasal as described above. — aim, ain, eim, ein, im, in, ym, yn, all having the sound of a in fat made nasal. — ien, final, is like y, followed in the same syllable by a in fat made nasal. — om, on, having the sound of o in or made nasal. — um, un, having the sound of u in up made nasal. There are thus four French nasal vowel sounds, as in the phrase, un bon vin blanc (ŭn bôN vĂN blĂN), a good white wine.

§ 15. In Portuguese, the nasal vowels are indicated by m and n as described above or by the tilde (˜) written over the vowel; ã (cf. ãe below), am, an, are about like English a in far made nasal. — em and en are about like a in ale, or e in men, made nasal. — im and in are i in ravine made nasal. — õ (cf. õe below), om, on, are o in pole, or in obey, made nasal.

The nasal diphthongs in Portuguese are: ãe, about like i in ice (äĕ), nasalized; ão, like ou in house, nasalized; õe, about like oi in oil, nasalized.

§ 16. Final on, in Spanish, especially in parts of Spanish America, is often pronounced with the sound of o in for, made nasal, but this pronunciation is not recommended.

§ 17. In Polish, ą, nasal, is like ô in for, made nasal. — ę in Polish is e in men made nasal; thus, Lęczyca, lĔN-chĭ′tsȧ.

IV. CONSONANTS AND CONSONANTAL COMBINATIONS.

§ 18. The consonants in the languages of Continental Europe are, for the most part, similar in sound to the same letters in English. The following exceptions may be mentioned: —

B.

§ 19. B at the end of a word in German, Dutch, and the Slavic languages, is pronounced like p. — In Spanish and modern Greek, b has nearly the same, but not quite so forcible, a sound as in English, being made with the lips brought together, but with loose or feeble contact, not pressed together firmly as in English. B, therefore, in these languages often sounds like English v as in have. Between two vowels, this similarity to v is more marked, so that the two sounds are often interchanged, such interchange often being marked by a corresponding interchange in spellings; as, Córdoba, Córdova, etc. Cf. Guide to Pron., § 133.

bh in Sanskrit and many modern East Indian names is strictly b + h, as in cob house, but the h may be omitted in English pronunciation.

C.

§ 20. C before e and i in Italian and Roumanian (c in Roumanian before î = k) is pronounced like ch in the English word chill; in the same position in Castilian Spanish it sounds like English th in thin; but throughout Spanish America, in the Philippine Islands, and in parts of Spain it is commonly pronounced like English s in sun. — It is like s in sun in French, Portuguese, and Catalan before e, i (or y). — In German, c before e, i, and y, is pronounced like the German z, or like ts in English. — In the Slavic languages, it has the same sound, even at the end of a word; thus, Prypec is pronounced prip′ets. — Before a, o, or u, c usually has the sound of k. — In Welsh and Gaelic, c is in all positions like k. — In Hungarian, c is sometimes used for Hungarian cz.

č in Bohemian, Croatian, and Bulgarian is like English ch in chop.

ć in Polish and Servian is about like English ch in chop; as, Zamość (zä′mŏshch), Karadzić (kȧ-rȧ′jĬch).

cc in Italian before e and i is ch prolonged, or like t-ch as in chit*ch*at.

ce. See c.

ch in Spanish has the same sound as in the English word chill. — In Catalan and Italian it is pronounced like k. — In German, Polish, and some other languages, it has a guttural sound, somewhat like a strongly aspirated h. This sound must be learned from an oral instructor. — In French (except in the case of some words derived from the Greek), and in Portuguese (with the same exception), ch has the sound of English sh, as in she. — ch in Sanskrit and East Indian names is usually like ch in chop; chh is the same followed by h, as in March *h*are, but the second h may be omitted in English pronunciation.

ci. See c.

co. See c.

cs in Hungarian sounds like English ch in church.

cu. See c.

D.

§ 21. D is, in general, more clearly dental than in English, that is, it is made with the tip of the tongue brought against the back of the upper front teeth, whereas in English it is commonly made with the tip of the tongue against the back gums, above the teeth. — At the end of a word, in German, Dutch, and the Slavic languages, it is pronounced like t. — In Spanish, Danish, and modern Greek, between two vowels or at the end of a word, it has a sound similar to th in this; some authorities regard the final d in Spanish as nearer th in thin; in colloquial Spanish final d is often omitted altogether; as, Madrid (mä-drĕ′). — In Danish and Norwegian d is silent after an l or n in the same syllable.

dd in Welsh is like th in that.

dh in many East Indian names is d + h, as in dead *h*ouse, but the h may be omitted in English pronunciation.

ds in Hungarian is like English j in joy.

dy in Hungarian blends the sounds of d and consonant y, and hence approximates the sound of English j in joy. The same combination occurs in some English words, as in sol*dier*, etc. (cf. gy).

dz is often like English j in joy.

G.

§ 22. G, in all the European languages, is hard before a, o, and u; in German, Danish, Norwegian, and modern Greek, it is hard in every situation, though it sometimes has a guttural sound. — Before e and i (or y), in French, Portuguese, Spanish, Swedish, and Roumanian (also before ä and ö in Swedish), it is like the j of these languages. To represent the j sound in French before a, o, u, an unaccented e is written after the g, the ge being equal to French j (zh). — Before e or i in Italian, g sounds like English j in joy, or soft g, as in gem, and gg in the same position is the same sound prolonged, or like d j in could jump; as, Correggio (kŏr-rĕd′jō). — In Dutch, g is always pronounced like German ch, described above, or like a strongly aspirated h. — Final g in German is like German ch or, as pronounced by some, like k. — In modern Greek, g before e, i, and y is sounded like English y. — In Swedish, g after l or r at the end of a primitive word or syllable is like English y in yes; thus, Göteborg, yö′tĕ-bŏr′y'.

gh in Italian is like gh in the English word ghost, or g in game, and it also has this pronunciation in Roumanian. — In Irish it is often given like a simple h. — In Oriental names it occurs as a strong guttural.

gli in Italian is, in nearly all cases, like lli in Wil*li*am, and if no other vowel follows, the gl takes the same sound, the i having its usual sound of English e in me.

gn in French and Italian (like ñ in Spanish and nh in Portuguese) combines the sounds of n and consonant y; that is to say, it is about like English ni in on*ion*.

gu in French, followed by e, i, or y, is usually pronounced like English g in gay, the u being silent; if followed by a consonant or ë, the u is pronounced as ordinary French u. — In Spanish, gu, before a, o, u, sounds like gw (or gu in anguish); before e or i, it is like g in go, unless the u is marked with the diæresis (ü), when it is pronounced gw. — In Italian, gu is gw before any vowel. — In Portuguese, gu before e or i is like English g in go.

gy in Hungarian blends the sounds of d and y consonant; thus, Magyar is pronounced mŏd′yŏr, Gyula is dyö′lŏ.

H.

§ 23. H in French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, is either never pronounced at all, or else is sounded so slightly that an English ear can scarcely perceive it, but see the combinations ch, gh, lh, nh, sch. In most of the other languages of Europe it has the same sound as in English (but cf. th); in German it is silent between two vowels in the same word, except when followed by ei. When final, h is generally silent, but in some instances h at the end of Persian or Arabic names is distinctly pronounced.

J.

§ 24. J in Italian, German, Polish, Hungarian, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and Dutch, is pronounced like English y in yes. — In French, Portuguese, and Roumanian, it has the sound of zh, or s in the English word pleasure. — In Spanish, j is similar in sound to a strongly aspirated h; x is often found for this sound, where the usual modern spelling is with j or g; thus, Méjico is the modern Spanish spelling of Mexico. — In many East Indian names j is like English j in jay, and jh (strictly j + h) may be pronounced in the same way.

K.

§ 25. K in Swedish before e, i, ö, y, in accented syllables is like ch in chop; as, Linköping (lĬn′chû′pĬng). If the syllable is not accented, it is like k in king; as, Blekinge (blā′kĬng-ĕ).

kh in Russian names sometimes indicates a guttural like German ch. In Oriental names it is usually guttural. In East Indian names it is like kh in in*kh*orn, but may be given as simple k in English pronunciation.

L.

§ 26. L, in general, is more distinctly dental than in English (cf. d), and the back of the tongue is not raised, as it commonly is in pronouncing English l, which is thus "dull" or guttural in comparison. — For l in Polish see ł and lh.

Ł, ł in Polish may be given as English l, though it is still more guttural in quality than the ordinary English l.

lh in Portuguese, ll in Spanish, and simple l in Polish, combine the sound of l and y consonant. Thus, velho is pronounced vā̆l′yŏ; villa, vēl′yȧ; llano, lyä′nō.

ll, initial as well as medial, is often pronounced like English y in yes in Spain and in Spanish America, but in careful speech the sound of l as shown above is retained. — ll in ly in Hungarian has the sound of Spanish ll.

N.

§ 27. N, in general, is more distinctly dental than in English (cf. d). Before k, q, or a hard c (= k) or g (gō), n often has the same sound as in English ink (Iŋk), as in Italian and Spanish.

ñ in Spanish (like gn in French and Italian, and nh in Portuguese) has a sound combining those of n and y consonant, and ń in Polish and ň in Bohemian, Croatian, Servian, and Bulgarian, also have this sound; as, Třeboň, trzhĕ′bôn-y′.

ng in German is like ng in English singer. — In the Maori and some other languages, ng is not divided, but, even when initial, is a single sound like the ng in singer; as, Tonga, tŏ′ngä.

nt in modern Greek is like English d or nd.

ny in Hungarian and Catalan has the same sound as Portuguese nh.

Q.

§ 28. Qu before e and i in Portuguese and Spanish, and before every vowel in French, has the sound of k. In most other languages, it is essentially the same as in English (as in queer). In German, it is like kv; as, Quierschied, kvēr′shĕt.

qv in Swedish is like kv.

R.

§ 29. R in most European languages is strongly trilled, either with the tip of the tongue, as in Italian and Spanish, or with the uvula (extremity of the soft palate), as in many parts of Germany and France.

ř in Bohemian is like r followed by zh (z in seizure); as, Třeboň, trzhĕ′bôn-y′.

rz in Polish has the sound of zh; as, Zgierz, zgyĕzh.

S.

§ 30. S in many European tongues, when between two vowels, has the sound of English z, or one very near it. — In German, it is usually properly pronounced as English z in zone, when initial before vowels, and when medial before vowels; like English s in so, when initial before consonants, medial before consonants, and final. Initial s in German in sp, st, is properly pronounced like sh in shoe, though many pronounce these combinations with simple s; as, Spandau (shpän′dou), Strehlen (shtrā′lĕn). — In Hungarian, s sounds like English sh, as in she, or German sch. — In Portuguese when final, or when preceding any surd consonant except another s, s sounds like English sh in ship; before a voiced (sonant) consonant it is like zh (z in seizure). — In French, final s is sometimes pronounced, but it is generally silent.

š in Bohemian, Croatian, Servian, and Bulgarian is like English sh in ship; thus, Vyškov, vYsh′kŏf.

ş in Roumanian has the sound of English sh in ship.

şc or şt in Roumanian before e and i is like sh in ship followed by t.

sc in Italian before e and i sounds like the English sh; as, Sciglio, shēl′yō, etc. See sch.

sch in German is pronounced like sh in English shoe. — In Italian and Roumanian, before e and i, it sounds like sk in English. — In Dutch, before all the vowels, except obscure e, its sound is similar to sk but harsher and more guttural, being equal to s + Dutch ch. Before an obscure e or before a consonant, or at the end of a word, sch in Dutch sounds like a strong s, as in English see.

sj in Dutch, Danish, and Swedish is like sh in ship.

sk in Swedish before e, i, or y resembles sh in ship. — In Norwegian, before i or y it is as sh in ship.

skj in Swedish and Norwegian resembles English sh.

ssz in Hungarian is long s.

sz in Hungarian is sounded like English s as in see or ss (cf. zs). — In Polish, sz sounds like English sh in ship; as, Warszawa, vär-shä′vä.

T.

§ 31. T, in general, has a sound somewhat more dental than is common in English (cf. d). — In modern Greek, t after n is pronounced d; as, Talanta, tä-län′dä. — In French, t final is usually silent.

ţ in Roumanian is like ts; as, Romanaţi (-näts).

th in all modern languages of Continental Europe except modern Greek (in which the character has the same sound as English th in thin) is pronounced like simple t, or like th in the English word thyme (tīm). — In Welsh and Icelandic it is like th in thin.

tsch in German is like ch in chip.

tsh in the Slavic languages has the sound of ch in chip.

tl in Mexican names is like tl in Atlanta, though it sometimes sounds like kl. In the Spanish pronunciation of Mexican names, tl, when final, is like Spanish te (tā).

ts in Hungarian is like cs in the same language; that is, like English ch in church.

ty in Hungarian blends the sounds of t and consonant y; it approaches in sound English ch. A similar combination of t with the sound of consonant y (as the initial element of ū) takes place in the English words creature, virtue.

tz is like ts.

V.

§ 32. V in the Slavic languages (Polish, Russian, etc.) and in German and Dutch, when occurring at the end of a word or name, is always pronounced like English f. — In German, v, except in some foreign words, mostly recent, and of Latin or Romance origin, is like English f.

§ 33. W in German, and in some other languages, is like English v. It is often uttered with the lips alone, without the aid of the teeth, though in German w is properly pronounced as English v. — In Welsh, w is usually like oo; as, Ebbw, ĕb-bōō′. — In Polish, w when ending a syllable is pronounced like English f, but is frequently omitted in pronunciation before the ending ski; as, Żolkiew (-kyĕf), Paderèwski, -rĕf′skĕ or -rĕs′kĕ. — See eeuw, ieuw, ow.

X.

§ 34. X in modern Spanish spelling is usually equal to English x as in box, but it is often found representing the sound of Spanish j or g, described above, the spellings with j or g being now preferred. In Mexican names it often has the sound of s; as, Tlaxcala, tläs-kä′lä. — In Portuguese and Catalan, x is like English sh in ship.

Y.

§ 35. Y, as a consonant, at the beginning of a word or syllable and before a vowel, is like English y in yes, but usually more emphatically pronounced, often sounding almost like French j, or English z in azure, or even, sometimes, like the English j in joke. — In Russian, y before a vowel has the sound of English y in yes, but, if preceded at the same time by another consonant, that consonant is "palatalized" by the y, ly, for instance, sounding like lli in million, ny like ni in onion, ty like ty in hit you. Cf. y, as a vowel, under VOWELS.

Z.

§ 36. Z in German has the sound of ts. — In Italian, z and zz are usually sounded like a strong, prolonged ts, but they sometimes have the sound of a long dz. — In Spanish, z is pronounced like the English th in thin, but throughout Spanish America and in parts of Spain it is pronounced like s in sun. See Guide to Pron., § 268. — In Swedish, z has the sound of English s in sun. — In Dutch, z is like English z. — In French, z either is silent or has the sound of English z. — In Portuguese, z when final is about like sh in ship.

ź in Polish is like zh (z in seizure); as, Lomża, lôm′zhä.

ż in Polish is about like zh (z in seizure).

zs in Hungarian is like zh.

V. SYMBOLS.

§ 37. The symbols used in the respelling for pronunciation in the GAZETTEER and BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY are the same as those employed in the body of the book, a full explanation of which will be found in the GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION.

A PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER

GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF THE WORLD

GIVING THE SPELLING, PRONUNCIATION, LOCATION, SIZE, POLITICAL RELATIONS, AND OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST FOR ABOUT THIRTY THOUSAND PLACES

THE aim of this Gazetteer is to answer concisely and accurately the ordinary questions that may be asked about any of the leading titles of geography: What is the correct spelling of a name and its correct local pronunciation? What is the location and what are the main features of the place, — for example, the population of a town, height of a mountain, length of a river, area of a lake, county, or state? What historical or political items of interest relate to it?

In this NEW EDITION many improvements over previous editions have been made. The latest statistical information from the decennial censuses taken in 1910 and 1911 by the leading nations of the world has been inserted. The latest official decisions respecting the spelling of place names have been sought and recorded. Many alternative forms have been added for countries, as Poland, Bohemia, the Balkan States, etc., where names from two or more languages are in current use, or where changing political conditions have resulted in the replacing of an old name by a new. Besides these, many ancient names of common occurrence in history or in the Latin and Greek classics have been inserted. Each of these alternative forms, if markedly different in spelling from the preferred form, has been repeated in its alphabetic place with a cross reference to the main entry. The inclusion of this large number of additional entries has been made possible by the divided page, whose utility has been established by the success attending its use in the main Vocabulary.

An entirely new and very useful feature is the linking together of the entries in the Gazetteer with pertinent information in the main Vocabulary of the Dictionary. Thus under London are cross references to CHARING CROSS, CHEAPSIDE, PICCADILLY and many other entries in the main Vocabulary where interesting facts respecting London are recorded. In the same way the references at France to LEGISLATURE, ARMY ORGANIZATION, LATIN MONETARY UNION, etc., give access to valuable facts respecting the government, military forces, money system, etc., of this country.

The choice of titles from the great and constantly increasing mass of geographical material has been a task of much difficulty. Those names have been selected which seemed of most interest to English-speaking readers. Thus there have been included all of the incorporated places (cities, boroughs, towns, villages, etc.) in the United States having more than one thousand inhabitants according to the Thirteenth Census (1910). For other countries, a higher limit of population has necessarily been chosen, varying somewhat according to the probable frequency with which names in any particular country would be sought. At the same time, many towns below the adopted limit of population have been inserted because of their historical, literary, or geographic interest.

In the definitions, the aim has been to secure the highest degree of accuracy possible in the present state of geographical knowledge, and to that end, the statements of the different authorities, especially when discrepant, have been carefully verified or revised by comparison with the best maps obtainable.
